

DELHI UNIVERSITY LIBRARY.

---

Class No. 823.3

Book No. G77MH

DELHI UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

Cl. No. 016016 F711 MAR 1976

Ae. No. 16503

Date of release for loan

This book should be returned on or before the date last stamped below. An overdue charge of one anna will be levied for each day the book is kept beyond that date.

MENAPHON
AND
A MARGARITE OF AMERICA

MENAPHON
By Robert Greene
¤ AND ¤ A MARGARITE OF AMERICA

By Thomas Lodge

---

*Edited by G. B. HARRISON, M.A.
Lecturer in English Literature at King's College in the University of London*

---

---

O X F O R D
Basil Blackwell

1 9 2 7

Made in Great Britain
at the KEMP HALL PRESS, St. Aldate's, Oxford.

INTRODUCTION

WHEN the history of taste comes to be written, not the least valuable evidence will be provided by those novels which were once popular but have lacked the universality, or the commonness, to outlive their original public; they were created to satisfy a desire and they are the direct expression of the taste of their readers. Great books survive transplanting; Shakespeare needs no reconstructed Globe or facsimile reprint of the Folio; but with the works of lesser men the reader must use his historic imagination, recreating, so far as is possible, the mood of those for whom they were first written.

Menaphon, Camillas Alarum to slumbering Euphues, in his melancholie Cell at Silexedra was entered for publication in the Stationers' Register on August 23rd, 1589, the entry reading—

Sampson Clerke Entred for his Copie, menophon
Camillus allarum to slumberinge Ephewes in his melancholy cell at Silexedria. Vnder th[e h]andes of Master doctour Staller and bothe
the Wardens. . . . vj<sup>d</sup><sup>1</sup>

It was printed before the end of the year and four other editions at least were printed in the next eighteen years.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Arber's Reprint, ii. 529.

<sup>2</sup> For a discussion of the bibliography of Menaphon, see Dr. R. B. McKerrow's edition of The Works of Thomas Nashe, iii. 300.

Menaphon is a typical specimen of the work of a University Wit with a sure instinct for what his public will appreciate. Greene had no high theories about his own intuitions, and he is quite frank in his intentions—‘I did it for your pleasures,’ he writes in his epistle ‘To the Gentlemen Readers,’ ‘whereunto I euer aymed my thoughts’; but at the same time he was well aware of his skill in this kind of writing, and anxious that they shall not overlook its merits, but ‘take a little pains to prie into my imagination’.

The University Wits at first served a very special public, and for some time they were not a little proud of the fact that they wrote not for the multitude but for a select audience of courtiers and their ladies, and gentlemen of the Inns of Court and of the two Universities who shared—as do all who have been nurtured in the old humane studies—the freemasonry of apt quotation or classical allusion. It was essentially a leisured public, valuing rather the manner than the matter in a piece of literary artistry.

But the ascendancy of the University Wits was short lived. Marlowe had already deserted them, and, to Greene’s thinking, was degrading himself by writing for the public stages; for Greene and his fellows were bitterly jealous of the professional players who were growing rich on the products of poor scholars’ brains. It was a losing battle, and there is an uneasy note in the verses which ‘Thomas Brabine, Gent.’ contributes in praise of the author—

‘Players auant, you know not to delight;
Welcome sweete Shepheard worth a Schollers sight.’

Within a very short time, if indeed he had not already done so, Greene was obliged to follow the rest and 'striue to thunder from a Stage-mans throate'; but he did it unwillingly, being forced by his necessities, and his bitterness was not diminished when he was confronted with the early successes of that Upstart Crow who was not even a University Man.

The preface 'To the Gentlemen Students of both Universities' contributed by Thomas Nashe has its place in the history of English criticism. It is the effusion of a young man just down from the University who is anxious to distinguish himself by breaking a lance in the cause of poetry, and at the same time glad of a chance to slip in a useful advertisement of his forthcoming Anatomie of Absurditie under the sponsorship of the most popular writer of the day. But he has the truth of the matter in him when he says, 'I deeme him farre vnworthy the name of a scholer, and so, consequently, to sacrifice his endeouours to Art, that is not a Poet, either in whole or in part.'

Nashe's preface and its allusions, however, belong to literary politics. Menaphon itself is a good example of the pastoral romance in Greene's earlier manner. Fortunately he has refrained from using his pastoral form as a cover for personalities, and has concerned himself with telling a very pleasing story. Greene imitates both Lyly and Sidney; he acknowledges his debt to the former on the title page, by presenting his story to 'Euphues in his Cell at Silexendra'; to the latter by placing his scene in Arcadia. But Greene is not a mere imitator; and he surpassed both his models. He realised that a pastoral romance should be of reasonable length and so avoided the interminable prolixity of the Arcadia; he shared Lyly's love for parallels and fine phrases, but he does not spoil his work by an overcurious exactitude of balance; nor does he sacrifice the story either to mere decoration or to a moral lesson. In fact Greene owes the faults of Menaphon to his models, the virtues are his own.

Not the least surprising quality of Greene's work is the atmosphere of purity and idyllic sweetness which appears in most of his novels and in his best plays, Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay and James the Fourth; for his vicious life in London was a byword amongst the opponents of poetry. Yet for all his loose companions Greene belonged by temperament to the serious generation of Sidney and Spenser; he was a moralist, sincerely and even morbidly religious; and it may be that in his works of fancy he tried to escape from the squalor of his brothel mates into the purer air of an Arcadia which owed not a little to the memory of those first months that he had spent in the country after his marriage with his much wronged 'Doll.'

Greene was a Norfolk man of lower middle class; Thomas Lodge his friend, and for some time his partner, came of a well-to-do city family, his father having been Lord Mayor of London in 1563.<sup>1</sup> He was born about 1558, and in 1571 was admitted to the Merchant Taylors' School under the famous headmaster, Richard Mulcaster. Thence he went up to Trinity College, Oxford, where he took his Bachelor's degree on July 8th, 1577. In the following spring, he became a member of Lincoln's Inn and began to study law. In 1579, when his mother died, he wrote a memorial poem, entered in the Stationers' Register on December 23rd, but no copies seem now to be in existence. In the same year he had written a reply to Gosson's School of Abuse; this was suppressed by authority, presumably because he defended plays, though the pamphlet, which has survived in spite of the censor, is not likely to have caused much harm to anyone's morals. Gosson's abuse of the stage was foolish enough on general grounds, but when he spoke of the practical inconveniences to the commonwealth he was talking sense. Lodge's counter-arguments are the debating points of a young man fresh from the University who has not yet learnt how to use his commonplace book. He argues for instance in favour of stage playing—

<sup>1</sup> For a biography of Lodge, see the Memoir contributed by Sir Edmund Gosse in 1887 to the edition of Lodge, published by the Hunterian Club.

'For tragedies and comedies Donate the gramarian sayth, they wer inuented by lerned fathers of the old time to no other purpose, but to yeede prayse vnto God for a happy haruest, or plentifull yeere, and that thys is trewe the name of Tragedye doeth importe, for if you consider whence it came, you shall perceiue (as Iodocus Badius reporteth) that it drewe his original of Tragos, Hircus, and Ode, Cantus (so called) for that the actors thereof had in rewarde for theyr labour, a Gotes skynne fylled wyth wyne. You see then that the fyrste matter of Tragedies was to giue thankes and prayses to God, and a gratefull prayer of the countrymen for a happye haruest, and this I hope was not discommendable. I knowe you will iudge is farthest from abuse, but to wade farther, thys fourme of inuention being found out, as the dayes wherein it was used did decay, and the world grew to more perfection, so y<sup>t</sup> witt of the younger sorte became more riper, for they leauing this fourme, inuented an other, in the which they altered the nature but not y<sup>e</sup> name: for for sonnets in prayse of y<sup>e</sup> gods, they did set forth the sower fortune of many exiles, the miserable fal of haples princes, The ruinous decay of many countryes, yet not content with this, they presented the liues of Satyers, So that they might wiselye vnder the abuse of that name, discouer the follies of many theyr foolish fellow citesens, and those monsters were then, as our parasites are now adayes; such, as with pleasure reprehended abuse.<sup>1</sup>

The Reply is innocent of any attempt at literary criticism.

Lodge's father died in 1583, and if An Allarum against Vsurers which was entered on November 4th in that year is in any way autobiographical, Lodge seems to have suffered the fate not uncommon to those who pawn their inheritance with a moneylender. The careers of the unfortunate victims of the broker are indeed very similar to what is known of Lodge's early life, though the general tone of the work does not suggest that Lodge was trying to make capital out of his own back-slidings. The Alarum is valuable not merely as an economic document but also as being the most important exposure of a social abuse between Harman's Caveat for Common Cursetors (1566) which showed up the professional beggars of the road and Greene's arraignment of the professional rascals of the city in his Conny Catching pamphlets (1591-2).

For the next five years Lodge seems to have published nothing. In 1589 was printed Scylla's Metamorphosis, 'with sundry other most absolute Poems and Sonnets,' in which he set a fashion followed by Shakespeare in Venus and Adonis. During these years Lodge made two voyages to the West Indies with Thomas

<sup>1</sup> A Reply to Stephen Gosson's Schoole of Abuse, Hunterian Club, 1879, page 35.

Cavendish, in which he wrote two at least of his best works, Rosalynde (published 1590) and A Margarite of America (published 1596), and perhaps others as well, for between 1589 and 1596 several volumes were printed, including the plays, The Wounds of Civil War and A Looking Glass for London (written in collaboration with Greene), and A Fig for Momus, the first batch of formal Elizabethan verse satire; though Lodge's satires are mild and general compared with the vituperation of his successors, Donne, Hall and Marston.

It is probable that by this time he had turned Catholic, and whether for politic reasons or because in (Anthony à Wood's words) 'his mind growing serious, he studied Physick, for the improvement of which he travelled beyond the seas, took the degree of Doctor of that faculty at Avenion [Avignon], returned and was incorporated in the University in the latter end of Qu. Elizabeth. Afterwards settling in London he practised it, being much frequented for his success in it, especially by the R. Catholicks (of which number he was by many suspected to be one) and was as much cried up to his last for Physick, as he was in his younger days for his poetical fancy.'<sup>1</sup>

Lodge's later publications were more weighty. He translated the works of Josephus in 1602, and in 1603, when the plague was raging in London, he wrote A Treatise of the Plague, an enlightened work, wherein he advocates the building of an isolation hospital for London, and lays down most sensible rules for the sanitary measures to be taken in infected houses. In 1613 he translated the moral and physical works of Seneca. He died of the plague in 1625.

<sup>1</sup> Athenæ Oxonienses, 1691, i. 424.

A Margarite of America, is perhaps the best of Lodge's fanciful works, though not so well known as Rosalynde, which has been more studied because it was the original source of Shakespeare's As You Like It, and has therefore suffered somewhat from unfair competition. Yet it is likely that Shakespeare was familiar with A Margarite from America too, since several reminiscences from it occur in his plays which seem to be too close to be coincidence. Protomachus' farewell counsels to Arsinous (pp. 129-132) are very similar to the 'few precepts' which Polonius bestows upon Laertes, and the poem Humanæ Miseriae Discursus (page 120) taken with Arsachus' remorseful groan, 'True it is that Plutarch saith that life is a stage play which euen to the last hath no decorum,' seem to be echoed in 'All the world's a stage.'

But Lodge deserves to be read for his own worth and not because a greater than he took some of his jewels and reset them. His elaborate tapestries still have colour, freshness and an intricate beauty which is reminiscent of some of the best paintings of Rosetti, but their worth lies in their curious artistry, and not in their utility either as psychological studies or as specimens of plot construction. The very real charm of Menaphon and A Margarite of America does not appear until they are read aloud, as they were meant to be read, with each sweet period rolled a little delicately round the palate; and preferably on a summer's day under a large oak tree.

MENAPHON Camillas alarum to slumbering Euphues, in his melancholie Cell at Silexedra.

VVherein are deciphered the variable effects of Fortune, the wonders of Loue, the triumphes of inconstant Time.

Displaying in sundrie concipted passions (figured in a continuat Historie) the Trophees that Virtue carrieth triumphant, maugre
the wrath of Envie, or the resolution of Fortune.

A worke worthie the youngest cares for pleasure, or the grauest censures for principles.

Robertus Greene in Aribus magister.

Omnes tulit punctum.

LONDON
Printed by T. O. for Sampson Clarke, and are to be sold behinde the Royall Exchange. 1589.

To the right Worshipfull and vertuous Ladie, the Ladie Hales, wife to the late deceased Sir Iames Hales; Robert Greene
wisheth increase of Worship and vertue.

WHEN Alexander (right worshipfull) was troubled with hottest feuers, Phillip the phisition broght him the coldest potions; extreams haue ther Antidotes, and the driest melancholy hath a moistest sanguin; wise Hortenzia midst hir greatest dumpes; either playd with hir Children, or read some pleasant verses: such as sorrow hath pinched mirth must cure. This considered; hearing (madam) of the passions your Ladiship hath vttered a late for the losse of your husband, a Knight in life worshipfull, vertuous, and full of honourable thoghts; discouering by such passionate sorowes the patterne of a louing and vertuous wife, whose ioyes liued in hir husbands weale, and ended with his life, I thought it my dutie to write this pastorall historie, conteyning the manifolde iniuries of fortune, that both your Ladiship might see her inconstant follies, and beare hir frownes with more patience, and when your dumpes were most deepe, then to looke on this little treatise for recreation: wherein there be as well humors to delight, as discourses to aduise. Which if your Ladiship shall vouch to accept, couering my presumption and faultes which your wonted courtesie; I haue the wished end of my labors. In which hope resting, I commit your Ladiship to the Almightie.

Yours in all humble seruice,

Robert Greene.

To the Gentlemen Readers, health.

I T fareth with mee Gentlemen, as with Batillus the ouer bold poet of Rome, that at euerie winke of Cæsar would deliuer vp an hundred verses, though neuer a one plausible, thinking the Emperours smile a priuiledge for his ignorance: so I hauing your fauor in letting passe my Pamphlets, feare not to trouble your patience with many works, and such as if Batillus had liued; bee might well haue subscribed his name to. But resting vpon your fauors I haue thus farre aduentured to let you see Camillas alarum to Euphues, who thought it necessarie not to let Euphues censure to Philautus, passe without requitall. If Gentlemen you finde my stile either magis humile in some place, or more sublime in another, if you finde darke Ænigmaes or Strange conceipts as if Sphinx on the one side, and Roscius on the other were playing the wagges; thinke the metaphors are well ment, and that I did it for your pleasures, wherunto I euer aymed my thoughts: and desire you to take a little paines to prie into my imagination. Wherin if you shall rest mine, I shall euer as I haue done rest yours; and so I bid you fare-well.

To the Gentlemen Students of both Vniuersities.

CVRTEOUS and wise, whose iudgements (not entangled with enuie) enlarge the deserts of the Learned by your liberall censures; vouchsafe to welcome your scholler-like Shepheard with such Vniersitie entertainement, as either the nature of your bountie, or the custome of your common ciuitie may affoord. To you he appeals that knew him ab extrema pueritia, whose placet he accounts the plaudite of his paines; thinking his daie labour was not altogether lauisht sine linea, if there be anie thing of all in it, that doth olere atticum in your estimate. I am not ignorant how eloquent our gowned age is growen of late; so that euerie mœchanicall mate abhorses the english he was borne too, and plucks with a solemne periphrasis, his vt vales from the inkhorne: which I impute not so much to the perfection of arts, as to the seruile imitation of vain-glorious tragœdians, who contend not so seriouslie to excell in action, as to embowell the clowdes in a speach of comparison; thinking themselues more than initiated in poets immortalitie, if they but once get Boreas by the beard, and the heauenlie bull by the deaw-lap. But herein I cannot so fully bequeath them to follie, as their idiote art-masters, that intrude th̄eselues to our eares as the alcumists of eloquence; who (moūted on the stage of arrogance) think to outbraue better pens with the swelling bumbast of a bragging blanke verse. Indeed it may be the ingrafted ouerflow of some kilcow conceipt, that ouercloith their imagination with a more than drunken resolution, beeing not extemporall in the inuention of anie other meanes to vent their manhood, commits the digestion of their cholericke incumbrances, to the spacious volubilitie of a drumming decasillabon. Mongst this kinde of men that repose eternitie in the mouth of a player, I can but ingrosse some deepe read Grammarians, who hauing no more learning in their scull, than will serue to take vp a commoditie; nor Art in their brain, than was nourished in a seruinc mans idlenesse, will take vpon them to be the ironicall censors of all, when God and Poetrie doth know, they are the simplest of all. To leauue these to the mercie of their mother tongue, that feed on nought but the crummes that fal from the translators trencher, I come (sweet friend) to thy Arcadian Menaphon; whose attire though not so statelie, yet comelie, dooth entitle thee aboue all other, to that temperatum dicendi genus, which Tullie in his Orator tearmeth true eloquence. Let other men (as they please) praise the mountaine that in seauen yeares brings foorth a mouse, or the Italianate pen, that of a packet of pilfries, affoordeth the presse a pamphlet or two in an age, and then in disguised arraie, vaunts Ouids and Plutarchs plumes as their owne; but giue me the man, whose extemporall vaine in anie humor, will excell our greatest Art-masters deliberate thoughts; whose inuention quicker than his eye, will challenge the proudest Rethoritian, to the contention of like perfection, with like expedition. What is he amongst Students so simple, that cannot bring forth (tandem aliquando) some or other thing singular, sleeping betwixt euerie sentence? Was it not Maros xij. yeares toyle, that so famed his xij. Æneidos? Or Peter Ramus xvij. yeares paines, that so praised his pettie Logique? Howe is it then, out drowping wits should so wonder at an exquisite line, that was his masters day labour? Indeede I must needes say, the descending yeares from the Philosophers Athens, haue not been supplied with such present Orators, as were able in anie English vaine to be eloquent of their owne, but either they must borow inuention of Ariosto, and his Countreymen, take vp choyce of words by ex-change in Tullies Tusculane, and the Latine Historiographers store-houses; similitudes, nay whole sheetes and tractacts verbatim, from the plentie of Plutarch and Plinie; and to conclude, their whole methode of writing, from the libertie of Comical fictions, that haue succeeded to our Rethoritians, by a second imitation: so that, well may the Adage, Nil dictum quod non dictum prius, bee the most iudicall estimate, of our latter Writers. But the hunger of our vnsatiate humorists, beeing such as it is, readie to swallowe all draffe without indifference, that insinuates it selfe to their senses vnder the name of delight, employes oft times manie thredbare witts, to emptie their inuention of their Apish deuices, and talke most superficiallie of Pollicie, as those that neuer ware gowne in the Vniuersitie; wherein they reniue the olde saide Adage, Sus Mineruam, and cause the wiser to quippe them with Asinus ad Lyram. Would Gentlemen and riper iudgements admit my motion of moderation in a matter of follie, I wold perswade them to phisicke their faculties of seeing and hearing, as the Sabæans doo their dulled senses with smelling; who (as Strabo reporteth) ouer-cloyed with such odoriferous sauours, as the naturall encrease of their Countrey, (Balsamum, Amomum, with Myrrhe and Franken-cense) sends foorth, refresh their nostrills with the vn-sauorie sent, of the pitchie slime, that Euphrates casts vp, and the contagious fumes of Goates beardes burnt; so woulde I haue them, beeing surfetted vnawares with the sweete societie of eloquence, which the lauish of our copious Language maie procure, to vse the remedie of contraries; and recreate their rebated witts, not as they did, with the senting of slyme or Goates beardes burnt, but with the ouer-seeing of that sublime dicendi genus, which walkes abroad for wast paper in each seruing mans pocket, and the otherwhile perusing of our Gothamists barbarisme; so shoulde the opposite comparison of Puritie, expell the infection of absurditie; and their ouer-rackte Rhethorique, bee the Ironicall re-creation of the Reader. But so farre discrepant is the idle vsage of our vnexperiens<sup>t</sup> punies from this pre-scription, that a tale of Ihon a Brainfords will, and the vnluckie furmentie, wil be as soon interteined into their libraries, as the best poeme that euer Tasso eternisht: which being the effect of an vndescerning iudgement, makes drosse as valuable as gold, and losse as welcome as gaine, the Glow-worme mentioned in Æsops fables, namelie the apes follie, to be mistaken for fire, when as God wot poore soules, they haue nought but their toyle for their heate, their paines for their sweate, and (to bring it to our english prouerbe) their labour for their trauaile. Wherein I can but resemble them to the Panther, who is so greedie of mens excrements; that if they be hangd vp in a vessell higher than his reach, he sooner killeth himselfe with the ouer-stretching of his windlesse bodie, than he wil cease from his intended enterprise. Oft haue I obserued what I now set downe; a secular wit that hath liued all daies of his life by what doo you lacke, to bee more iudicall in matters of conceit, than our quadrant crepundios, that spit ergo in the mouth of euerie one they meete: yet those and these are so affectionate to dogged detracting, as the most poysonous Pasquil, anie durtie mouthed Martin, or Momus euer composed, is gathered vp with greedinesse before it fall to the ground, and bought at the deerest though they smell of the friplers lauander halfe a yeere after: for I know not how the minde of the meanest is fedde with this follie, that they impute singularitie, to him that slanders priuelie, and count it a great peece of arte in an inkhorne man, in anie tapsterlie tearmes whatsoeuer, to oppose his superiours to enuie. I will not denie but in scholler-like matters of controuersie, a quicker stile may passe as commendable; and that a quippe to an asse is as good as a goad to an oxe: but when an irregular idiot, that was vp to the eares in diuinitie, before euer he met with probabile in the Vniuersitie, shall leaue pro et contra before he can scarcely pronounce it, and come to correct Common weales, that neuer heard of the name of Magistrate before he came to Cambridge, it is no meruaile if euery alehouse vaunt the table of the world turned vpside down; since the childe beats his father, and the asse whippes his master. But least I might seeme with these night crowes, Nimis curiosus in aliena republica, I leturne backe to my first text, of studies of delight; and talke a little in friendship with a few of our triuiall translators. It is a cōmon practise now a daies amongst a sort of shifting companions, that runne through euery arte and thriue by none, to leaue the trade of Nouerint whereto they were borne, and busie themselves with the indeuors of Art, that could scarcelie latinize their necke-verse if they should haue neede;

yet English Seneca read by candle light yeeldes manie good sentences, as Bloud is a begger, and so foorth: and if you intreate him faire in a frostie morning, he will affoord you whole Hamlets, I should say handfulls of tragical speaches. But ô grieve! tempus edax rerum, what's that will last alwaies? The sea exhaled by droppes will in continuance be drie, and Seneca let bloud line by line and page by page, at length must needes die to our stage: which makes his famisht followers to imitate the Kidde in Æsop, who enamored with the Foxes new fangles, forsooke all hopes of life to leape into a new occupation; and these men renouncing all possibilities of credit or estimation, to intermeddle with Italian translations: wherein how poorelie they haue plodded, (as those that are neither prouenzall men, nor are able to distinguishe of Articles,) let all indifferent Gentlemen that haue trauailed in that tongue, discerne by their twopenie pamphlets: and no meruaile though their home-born mediocritie be such in this matter; for what can be hoped of those, that thrust Elisium into hell, and haue not learned so long as they haue liued in the spheares, the iust measure of the Horizon without an hexameter. Sufficeth them to bodge vp a blanke verse with ifs and ands, and other while for recreation after their candle stufte, hauing starched their beardes most curioslie, to make a peripateticall path into the inner parts of the Citie, and spend two or three howers in turning ouer French Doudie, where they attract more infection in one minute, than they can do eloquence all dayes of their life, by conuersing with anie Authors of like argument. But least in this declamatorie vaine, I should condemne all and commend none, I will proound to your learned imitation, those men of import, that haue laboured with credit in this laudable kinde of Translation; In the forefront of whom, I cannot but place that aged Father Erasmus, that inuested most of our Greeke Writers, in the roabes of the auncient Romaines; in whose traces, Philip Melancthon, Sadolet, Plantine, and manie other reuerent Germanies insisting, haue reedified the ruines of our decayed Libraries, and merueilouslie inriched the Latine tongue with the ex pense of their toyle. Not long after, their emulation beeing transported into England, euerie priuate Scholler, William Turner, and who not, beganne to vaunt their smattering of Latine, in English Impressions. But amongst others in that Age, Sir Thomas Eliots elegance did seuer it selfe from all equalls, although Sir Thomas Moore with his Comicall wit, at that instant was not altogether idle: yet was not Knowledge fullie confirmed in his Monarchie amongst vs, till that most famous and fortunate Nurse of all learning, Saint Jobns in Cambridge, that at that time was as an Vniuersitie within it selfe; shining so farre aboue all other Houses, Halls, and Hospitalls whatsoeuer, that no Colledge in the Towne, was able to compare with the tythe of her Students; hauing (as I haue hearde graue men of credite report) more candles light in it, euerie Winter Morning before fowre of the clocke, than the fowre of clocke bell gaue stroakes; till Shee (I saie) as a pittyng Mother, put too her helping hande, and sent from her fruitlefull wombe, sufficient Schollers, both to support her owne weale, as also to supplie all other inferiour foundations defects, and namelie that royll erection of Trinitie Colledge, which the Vniuersitie Orator, in an Epistle to the Duke of Somerset, aptlie tearmed Colona diducta, from the Suburbes of Saint Jobns. In which extraordinarie conception, vno partu in rempublicam prodiere, the Exchequer of eloquence Sir Ibon Cheeke, a man of men, supernaturally traded in al tongues, Sir Ibon Mason, Doctor Watson, Redman, Aschame, Grindall, Leuer, Pilkington: all which, haue either by their priuate readings, or publique workes, repurged the errors of Artes, expelde from their puritie, and set before our eyes, a more perfect Methode of Studie. But howe ill their preceptes haue prospered with our idle Age, that leaue the fountaines of sciences, to follow the riuers of Knowledge, their ouer-fraught Studies, with trifling Compendiaries maie testifie: for I knowe not howe it comes to passe, by the doating practise of our Diuinitie dunces, that striue to make their Pupills puppet men, before they are reconciled to Priscian: but those yeares, which shoulde bee employed in Aristotle, are expired in Epitomes; and well too, they maye haue so much Catechisme vacation, to rake vp a little refuse Philosophie. And heere could I enter into a large fielde of inuictiue, against our abiect abbreviations of Artes, were it not growen to a newe fashion amongst our Nation, to vaunt the pride of contraction in euerie manarie action: in so much, that the Pater noster, which was woont to fill a sheete of paper, is written in the compasse of a pennie: whereupon one merelie affirmed, that prouerb to be deriued, No pennie, no pater noster; which their nice curtalling, puts me in mind of the custome of the Scythians, who if they be at any time distressed with famin, take in their girdles shorter, and swaddle themselues streighter, to the intent no vacuum beeing left in their intrayles, hunger should not so much tirannnize ouer their stomacks; euen so these men opprest with a greater penurie of Art, do pound their capacitie in bar-ren Compendiums, and bound their base humors, in the beggerly straites of a hungry Analysis, least longing after that infinitum which the pouertie of their conceit cannot compasse, they sooner yeeld vp their youth to destinie, than their heart to vnderstanding. How is it then, such bungling practitioners in principles, shuld euer profite the Common wealth by their negligent paines, who haue no more cunning in Logique or Dialogue Latine, than appertains to the literall construction of either; neuerthelesse it is daily apparant to our domesticall eyes, that there is none so forward to publish their imperfections, either in the trade of glose or translations, as those that are more vnlearned than ignorance, and lesse conceiuing than infants. Yet dare I not impute absurditie to all of that societie, though some of them haue set their names to their simplicitie. Who euer my priuate opinion condemneth as faultie, Master Gascoigne is not to bee abridged of his deserued esteeme, who first beate the path to that perfection which our best Poets haue aspired too since his departure; whereto he did ascend by comparing the Italian with the English, as Tullie did Græca cum Latinis. Neither was Master Turbeuile the worst of his time, although in translating he attributed too much to the necessitie of rime. And in this page of praise, I cannot omit aged Arthur Golding, for his industrious toile in Englishing Ouids Metamorphosis, besides manie other exquisite editions of Diuinitie, turned by him out of the French tongue into our own. Master Phaer likewise is not to be forgot in regard of his famous Virgil, whose heauely verse had it not bin blemisht by his hautie thoghts England might haue long insulted in his wit, and corrigat qui potest haue been subscribed to his workes. But fortune the Mistres of change with a pitying compassion, respecting Master Stanibursts praise, would that Pbaer shoulde fall that hee might rise, whose heroicall Poetrie infired, I should say inspired, with an hexameter furie, recalled to life, what euer hissed barbarisme, hath bin buried this hundred yeare; and reuiued by his ragged quill, such carterlie varietie, as no hodge plowman in a countrie, but would haue held as the extremitie of clownerie; a patterne whereof, I will propounde to your iudgements, as neere as I can, being parte of one of his descriptions of a tempest, which is thus

*Then did he make, beauens vault to rebounde, with rounce
robble bobble
Of ruffe raffe roaring, with thwick thwack thurlery bouncing*

Which strange language of the firmament neuer subiect before to our common phrase, makes vs that are not vsed to terminante heauens moueings, in the accents of to any voice, esteeme of their triobulare interpreter, as of some Thrasonical huffe snuffe, for so terrible was his stile, all milde eares, as would haue affrighted our peaceable Poets, from intermedling hereafter, with that quarrelling kinde of verse; had not sweete Master France by his excellent translation of Master Thomas Watsons sugred Amintas, animated their dulled spirits, to such high witted endeuors. But I knowe not how, their ouer timerous cowardise, hath stooode in awe of enuie, that no man since him, durst imitate any of the worste, of those Romane wonders in english, which makes me thinke, that either the louers of mediocritie, are verie many, or that the number of good Poets, are very small: and in trueth, (Master Watson except, whom I mentioned before) I knowe not almost any of late dayes that hath shewed himselfe singular in any special Latine Poëm, whose Amintas, and translated Antigone may march in equipage of honour, with any of our ancient Poets. I will not say but wee had a Haddon whose pen would haue challenged the Lawrell from Homer, together with Carre, that came as nere him, as Virgil to Theocritus. But Tho. Newton with his Leyland, and Gabriell Haruey, with two or three other, is almost all the store, that is left vs at this hower. Epitaphers, and position Poets haue wee more than a good many, that swarme like Crowes to a dead carcas, but flie like Swallows in the VVinter, from any continuuate subiect of witte. The efficient whereof, I imagine to issue, from the vpstart discipline, of our reformatorie Churchmen, who account wit vanitie, and poetrie impietie; whose error, although the necessitie of Philosophie might confute, which lies couched most closely vnder darke fables profunditie, yet I had rather referre it, as a disputatiue plea to diuines, than set it downe as a determinate position, in my vnexperienſt opinion. But how euer their dissensious iudgements, should decree in their afternoone sessions of an sit, the priuat trueth, of my discouered Creede in this controuersie is this, that as that beast, was thought scarce worthie to bee sacrificised, to the Ægyptian Epaphus, who had not some or other blacke spotte on his skinne: so I deeme him farre vnworthie of the name of a scholler, and so consequentlie, to sacrifice his endeuors to a ſt, that is not a Poet, either in whole or in a parte and here peraduenture, some desperate quipper, will canuaze my proposed comparison plus ultra, reconciling the allusion of the blacke spot, to the blacke pot; which makes our Poets vndermeale Muses so mutinous, as euerie stanzo they pen after dinner, is full poynted with a stabbe. Which their dagger drunkennesse, although it might be excused, with Tam Marti quam Mercurio, yet will I couer it as well as I may, with that prouerbiall fæcundi calices, that might wel haue been doore keeper, to the kanne of Sileneus, when nodding on his Asse trapt with iuie, hee made his moist nosecloth, the pausing intermedium, twixt euerie nappe. Let frugale scholares, and fine fingerd nouices, take their drinke by the ownce, and their wine by the halpe-worthes, but it is for a Poet, to examine the pottle pottes, and gage the bottome of whole gallons; qui bene vult noīeū, debet ante nīeū. A pot of blew burning ale, with a fierie flaming tost, is as good as Pallas with the nine Muses on Pernassus top: without the which, in vaine may they crie; ô thou my muse inspire mee with some pen, when they want certaine liquid sacrifice, to rouze her foorth her denne. Pardon me Gentlemen, though somewhat merely I glaunce, at their imoderate follie, who affirme that no man can write with conceit, except he take counsell of the cup: nor would I haue you thinke, that Theonino dente, I arme my stile against all, since I doo knowe the moderation of many Gentlemen of that studie, to be so farre from infamie, as their verse from equalitie: whose sufficiencie, were it as well seene into, by those of higher place, as it wanders abroade vnrewarded, in the mouthes of vngratefull monsters, no doubt but the remembrance, of Mæcenas liberalitie, extended to Maro, and men of like qualitie, would haue lefte no memorie to that prouerb of pouertie, Si nihil attuleris, ibis Homere foras. Tut saies our English Italians, the finest witts our Climate sends foorth, are but drie braind doltes, in comparison of other countries: whome if you interrupt with redderationem, they will tell you of Petrache, Tasso, Celiano, with an infinite number of others; to whome if I should oppose Chaucer, Lidgate, Gower, with such like, that liued vnder the tirranie of ignorance, I do think their best louers, would bee much discontented, with the collation of contraries, if I should write ouer al their heads, Haile fellow well met. One thing I am sure of, that each of these three, haue vaunted their meeters, with as much admiration in English, as euer the proudest Ariosto, did his verse in Italian. What should I come to our court, where the otherwhile vacations of our grauer Nobilitie, are prodigall of more pompous wit, and choyce of words, than euer tragick Tasso could attaine too: but as for pastorall Poëmes, I will not make the comparison, least our countrimens credit should bee discountenanst by the contention, who although they cannot fare, with such inferior facilitie, yet I knowe would carrie the bucklers full easilie, from all forreine brauers, if their subiectum circa quod, should sauor of any thing haughtie: and should the challenge of deepe conceit, be intruded by any forreiner, to bring our english wits, to the tutchstone of Arte, I would preferre, diuine Master Spencer, the miracle of wit to bandie line for line for my life, in the honor of England, gainst Spaine, France, Italie, and all the worlde. Neither is he, the only swallow of our summer, (although Apollo, if his Tripos were vp again would pronounce him his Socrates) but he being forborne, there are extant about London, many most able men, to reuiew Poetrie, though it were executed ten thousand times, as in Platos, so in Puritanes common wealth; as for example Mathew Roydon, Thom- as Atchelow and George Peele, the first of whome, as hee hath shewed himselfe singular, in the immortall Epitaph of his beloued Astrophel, besides many other most absolute comicke inuentions (made more publique by euerie mans praise, than they can bee by my speache) so the second, hath more than once or twise manifested, his deepe witted, schollership in places of credit; and for the last, thogh not the least of them all, I dare commend him to all that know him, as the chiefe supporter of pleasaunce nowe liuing, the Atlas of Poetrie, and primus verborum Artifex: whose first encrease, the Arraignement of Paris, might plead to your opinions, his pregnant dexteritie of wit, and manifold varietie of inuention; wherein (me iudice) hee goeth a step beyond all that write. Sundrie other sweete Gentlemen I know, that haue vaunted their pens in priuate deuices, and trickt vp a companie of taffata fooles with their feathers, whose beautie if our Poets had not pecte with the supply of their periwigs, they might haue antickt it vntill this time vp and downe the countrey with the King of Fairies, and dinde euerie daie at the pease porridge ordinarie with Delphrigus. But Tolossa hath forgot that it was sometime sackt, and beggers that euer they caried their fardles on footback: and in truth no meruaile, when as the deserued reputation of one Roscius, is of force to inrich a rabble of counterfets; yet let subiects for all their insolence, dedicate a De profundis euerie morning to the preseruation of their Cæsar, least their encreasing indignities returne them ere long to their iugling to mediocrity, and they bewaile in weeping blankes the wane of their Monarchie.

As Poetrie hath beene honoured in those her forenamed professors, so it hath not beene any whit disparaged by

William Warners absolute Albions. And heere Authoritie hath a full point: in whose reuerence insisting, I cease to expose to your sport the picture of those Pamphleters, and Poets, that make a patrimonie of In speech and more then a younger brothers inheritance of their Abcie. Reade fauourably, to incourage me in the firstlings of my folly, and perswade your selues, I will persecute those idiots and their heires vnto the third generation, that haue made Art bankerout of her ornaments, and sent Poetry a begging vp and downe the Countrey. It may be, my Anatomie of Absurdities may acquaint you ere long with my skill in Surgerie, wherein the diseases of Arte more merrily discouered may make our maimed Poets out together their blankes vnto the building of an Hospitall.

If you chance to meeite it in Paules, shaped in a new suite of similitudes, as if like the eloquent apprentice of Plutarch, it were propped at seuen yeeres end in double apparell, thinke his master hath fulfilled couenants, and onely cancelled the Indentures of dutie. If I please, I will thinke my ignorance indebted vnto you that applaud it: if not, what rests, but that I be excluded from your courtesie, like Apocrypha from your Bibles?

How euer, yours euer,
Thomas Nasb.

¶ In laudem Authoris,
Distichon amoris.

DELICIOUS words, the life of wanton wit,
That doo inspire our soules with sweete content;
W<sup>h</sup>y haue your faither Hermes thought it fit
My eyes should surfeit by my hearts consent?

Full twentie Summers haue I fading seene,
And twentie Floras in their golden guise:
Yet neuer viewd I such a pleasant Greene
As this, whose garnisht gleades, compare denies.

Of all the flowers a Lillie once I lou'd,
Whose labouring beautie brancht it selfe abroade;
But now old age his glorie hath remoud,
And Greener obiectes are my eyes aboade.

No countrey to the downes of Arcadie,
Where Aganippes euer springing wells
Doo moyst the meades with bubling melodie;
And makes me muse, what more in Delos dwelles;

There feedes our Menaphons celestiall Muse,
There makes his pipe his pastorall reporte;
Whiche strained now a note aboue his use,
Foretels, hele nere more chaunt of Choas sporte.

Reade all that list, and reade till you mislike;
Condemne who can, so enuie be no iudge:
No reede can swell more higher, lesse it shrike.
Robin thou hast done well, care not who grudge.

H E N R I E V P C H E A R Gentleman.

Thomas Brabine Gent.

in praise of the Author.

*COME foorth you witts that vaunt the pompe of speach,
And striue to thunder from a Stage-mans throate:
View Menaphon a note beyond your reach;
Whose sight will make your drumming descant doate:
Players auant, you know not to delight;
Welcome sweete Shepheard, worth a Schollers sight.*

*Smirna is drie, and Helicon exhal'd, Caballian founts haue left their springing sourse,
Parnassus with his Lawrell stands appal'd;
And yet His Muse keepes on her wonted course:
Wonted said I? I wrong his paines too much,
Since that his pen before brought foorth none such.*

*One writes of loue, and wanders in the aire;
Another stands on tearmes of trees and stones:
When beauens compare yeeldes but the praise of faire,
And christall can describe but flesh and bones:
Yet countrey swaynes, whose thoughts are faith and troth,
Will shape sweete words of wooll and russet cloth.*

*Mongst whom if I my Tityrus should chuse,
Whose warbling tunes might wanton out my woes;
To none more ofynre would my solace vse,
Than to his Pastoralls their mortall foes.
Sweete verse, sweete prose, how haue you pleasede my waine?
Be thou still Greene, whiles others glorie waine.*

FINIS.

Arcadia.

The reports of the Shepheards.

FTER that the wrath of mightie Ioue, had wrapt Arcadia with noysome pestilence, in so much that the ayre yeelding preiudicall sauors, seemd to be peremptory in some fatall resolution, Democles soueraigne and King of that famous Continent pitying the sinister accidents of his people, being a man as iust in his censures as royll in his possessions, as carefull for the weale of his country, as the continuance of his diadem, thinking that vnpeopled Cities were Corasius to Princes consciences, that the strength of his subiects was the sinnewes of his dominions, and that euery crowne, must conteyne a care, not onely to winne honour by forrayne conquests, but in mainteining dignitie with ciuill and domestical insights: Democles grounding his arguments vpon these premisses, coueting to be counted Pater Patriæ, calling a Parliament together, whether all his Nobilitie incited by summons made their repaire, elected two of his chiefe Lordes to passe vnto Delphos, at *Apollo*s Oracle to heare the fatall sentence, either of their future miserie or present remedie. They hauing their charge, postng from Arcadia to the Tripos where Pithia sate, the sacred Nymph that deliuered out *Apollo*s Dylonimas, offering as their manner is their orizons and presents, as wel to intreate by deuotion, as to perswade by boūtie, they had returned from Apollo this doome.

When Neptune riding on the Southerne seas shall from the bosome of his Lemman yeeld Tb'arcadian wonder, men and Gods to please:

*Plentie in pride shall march amidst the field, Dead men shall warre, and unborne babes shall frowne,
And with their fawchbens bew their foemen downe.*

When Lambes haue Lions for their surest guide, and Planets rest vpon tb'arcadian hills:

*When swelling seas haue neither ebbe nor tide,
When equall bankes the Ocean margine fills.*

*Then looke Arcadians for a happie time,
And sweete content within your troubled Clyme.*

No sooner had Pithia deliuered this scroll to the Lordes of Arcadie, but they departed and brought it to Democles, who causing the oracle to be read amongst his distressed commons, found the Delphian censure more full of doubts to amaze, than fraught with hope to comfort; thinking rather that the angrie God sent a peremptorie presage of ruine, thā a probable ambiguitie to applaud any hope of remedie: yet loath to haue his carefull subiects fall into the balefull labyrinth of despaire, Democles began to discourse vnto them, that the interpreters of Apollos secretes, were not the conceipts of humane reason, but the successe of long expected euent; that Comets did portend at the first blaze, but tooke effect in the dated bosome of the destinies; that oracles were foretold at the Delphian Cauē, but were shapte out and finished in the Counsell house. With such perswasiuē arguments Democles appeased the distressed thoughtes of his doubtful countrimen, and commanded by proclamation that no man should prie into the quiddities of Apollos answere, least sundrie censures of his diuine secrecie, shoulde trouble Arcadia with some sodaine mutinie. The King thus smoothing the heate of his cares, rested a melancholy man in his Courts; hiding vnder his head the double faced figure of Ianus, as well to cleare the skies of other men's conceiptes with smiles, as to furnish out his owne dūps with thoughts. But as other beasts leuell their lookes at the countenance of the Lion, and birdes make wing as the Eagle flyes: so Regis ad arborium totus componitur orbis: the people were measured by the minde of the soueraine, and what stormes soeuer they smoothed in priuate conceipt, yet they made haye, and cried holiday in outward appearance: insomuch that euerie man repaired to his owne home, and fell either vnto pleasures or labours, as their living or content allowed them.

Whiles thus Arcadia rested in a silent quiet, Menaphon the Kings Shepheard, a man of high account among the Swaines of Arcadie, loued of the Nymphes, as the paragon of all their countrey youngsters, walking solitarie downe to the shore, to see if any of his ewes and lambes were straggled downe to the strand to brouse on sea iuie, wherfore they take speciaill delight to feede; he found his flockes grazing vpon the Promontorie Mountaines hardlie: whereon resting himselfe on a hill that ouer-peered the great Mediterraneum, noting how Phæbus fetched his Laualtos on the purple Plaines of Neptunus, as if he had meant to haue courted Thetis in the roialtie of his roabes: the Dolphines (the sweete conceipters of Musicke) fetcht their carreers on the calmed waues, as if Arion had touched the stringes of his siluer sounding instrument: the Mermaides thrusting their heades from the bosome of Amphitrite, sate on the mounting bankes of Neptune, drying their waterie tresses in the Sunne beames. Æolus forbare to throwe abroad his gustes on the slumbering browes of the Sea-God, as giuing Triton leaue to pleasure his Queene with desired melodie, and Proteus libertie to followe his flockes without disquiet.

Menaphon looking ouer the champion of Arcadie to see if the Continent were as full of smiles, as the seas were of fauours, sawe the shrubbes as in a dreame with delightfull harmonie, and the birdes that chaunted on their braunches not disturbed with the least breath of a fauourable Zephirus. Seeing thus the accord of the Land and Sea, casting a fresh gaze on the water Nymphs, he began to consider how Venus was feigned by the Poets to spring of the froathe of the Seas; which draue him straight into a deepe coniecture of the inconstancie of Loue: that as if Luna were his load-starre, had euerie minute ebbes and tides, sometime overfowing the banks of Fortune with a gracious look lightened from the eyes of a fauorable louer, otherwhiles ebbing to the dangerous shelfe of despaire, with the piercing frowne of a foward Mistresse. Menaphon in this browne studie, calling to minde certaine Aphorismes that Anacreon had pend downe as principles of loues follies, being as deepe an enemie to fancie, as Narcissus was to affection, began thus to scoffe at Venus Deitie.

Menaphon thy mindes fauours, are greater than thy wealths fortunes, thy thoughtes higher than thy birth, and thy priuate concept better than thy publique esteeme. Thou art a shepheard Menaphon, who in feeding of thy flockes findest out natures secrecie, and in preventing thy lambes preiudice conceiptest the Astronom-icall motions of the heauens: holding thy sheep-walkes to yeeld as great Philosophie, as the Ancients discourse in their learned Academies. Thou countest labour as the Indians doo their Chrisocolla wherwith they trie euerie mettall, and thou examine euerie action. Content sitteth in thy minde as Neptune in his Sea-throne, who with his trident mace appeaseth euerie storme. When thou seest the heauens frowne thou thinkest on thy faults, and a cleere skie putteth thee in minde of grace: the summers glorie tels thee of youths vanitie, the winters parched leaues of ages declining weaknes. Thus in a myroure thou measurest thy deedes with equall and considerate motions, and by being a shepheard findest that which Kings wāt in their royalties. Enuie ouerlooketh thee, renting with the windes the Pine trees of Ida, when the Affrick shrubs wauē not a leafe with the tempestes. Thine eyes are vaylde with content that thou canst not gaze so high as ambition: and for loue, and with that in naming of loue, the shepheard fell into a great laughter. Loue Menaphon, why of all follies that euer Poets fained, or men euer faulted with, this foolish imagination of loue is the greatest: Venus forsooth for her wanton escapes must be a Goddesse, and her bastard a Deitie: Cupide must be yong and euer a boy to prooue that loue is fond and witlesse, wings to make him inconstant, and arrowes whereby to shew him feareful: blinde (or all were not worth a pinne) to prooue that Cupides leuell is both without aime and reason: thus is the God, and such are his Votaries. As soone as our shepheards of Arcadie settle themselues to fancie, and weare the characters of Venus stampte in their forheads, straight their attire must bee quaint, their lookes full of amours, as their Gods quiuer is full of arrowes; their eyes holding smiles and teares, to leape out at their Mistres faours or her frownes: sighes must flie as figures of their thoughts, and euerie wrinkle must be tempred with a passion: thus suted in outward proportion, and made excellent in inward constitution, they straight repaire to take viewe of their Mistres beautie. She as one obseruant vnto Venus principles, first tieth loue in her tresses, and wraps affection in the tramels of her haire; snaring our swains in her locks as Mars in the net, holding in her forehead Fortunes Calender, either to assigne dismal influence, or some fauourable aspect. If a wrinkle appeare in her brow, then our shepheard must put on his working day face, and frame nought but dolefull Madrigalls of sorrowe; if a dimple grace her cheeke, the heauens cannot prooue fatal to our kinde hearted louers; if she seeme coy, then poemes of death mounted vpon deepe drawne sighes, flie from their master to sue for some fauour, alledging how death at the least may date his miserie: to be briefe, as vpon the shoares of Lapanthe the winds continue neuer one day in one quarter, so the thoughts of a louer neuer continue scarce a minute in one passion; but as Fortunes globe, so is fancies seate variable and inconstant. If louers sorrowes then be like Sisiphus turmoyles, and their faours like honnie bought with gall; let poore Menaphon then liue at labour, and make esteeme of Venus as of Mars his concubine; and as the Cimbrians hold their idols in account but in euerie tempest, so make Cupide a God, but whē thou art ouerpained with passions, and that Menaphon wil neuer loue, for as long as thou temperest thy handes with labours, thou canst not fetter thy thoughts with loues. And in this Satyricall humor smiling at his owne con-

ceipts, hee tooke his pipe in his hand, and betweene euerie report of his instrument sung a stanzo to this effect.

Menaphons Song.

Some say Loue

Foolish Loue

Dotb rule and gouerne all the Gods,

I say Loue,

Inconstant Loue

Sets mens senses farre at ods.

Some sware Loue

Smooth'd face Loue

Is sweetest sweete that men can haue:

I say Loue,

Sower Loue

Makes vertue yeeld as beauties slae.

A bitter sweete, a follie worst of all

That forceth wisedome to be follies thrall.

Loue is sweete.

Wherin sweete?

In fading pleasures that doo paine.

Beautie sweete.

Is that sweete

That yeeldeth sorrow for a gaine?

If Loues sweete,

Heerein sweete

That minutes ioyes are montblie woes.

Tis not sweete,

That is sweete

Nowhere, but where repentance growes.

Then loue who list if beautie be so sower:

Labour for me, Loue rest in Princes bower.

Menaphon hauing ended his roundelay, rising vp, thinking to passe from the mountaine downe to the valley, casting his eye to the sea side, espied certain fragments of a broken ship floating vpon the waues, and sundrie persons driuen vpon the shore with a calme, walking all wet and weary vpon the sands, wondring at this strange sight he stood amazed; yet desirous to see the euent of this accident, he shrowded himself to rest vnespied til he might perceiue what would happen: at last he might descrie it was a woman holding a childe in her armes, and an olde man directing her as it were her guide. These three (as distressed wrackes) preserued by some further forepoynting fate, coueted to clime the moūtaine, the better to vse the fauor of the Sunne, to drie their drenched apparaile; at last crawled vp where poore Menaphon lay close, and resting them vnnder a bush, the old man did nothing but sende out sighes, and the woman ceased not from streaming foorth riuolts of teares, that hung on her cheeke like the dropes of pearled dew vpon the riches of Flora. The poore babe was the touch-stone of his mothers passions; for when he smiled and lay laughing in hir lappe, were her heart neuer so deeply ouercharged with her present sorrowes; yet kissing the pretie infant, shee lightened out smiles from those cheeke, that were furrowed with continual sources of teares: but if he cried, then sighes as smokes, and sobbes as thundercracks, foreranne those showers, that with redoubled distresse distilled from her eyes: thus with pretie inconstant passions trimming vp her babie, and at last to lull him a sleepe, she warbled out of her wofull breast this dittie.

Sephestias song to her childe.

*Weepe not my wanton smile vpon my knee,
When thou art olde ther's griefe inough for thee.*

*Mothers wagge, pretie boy,
Fathers sorrow, fathers ioy;
When thy father first did see
Such a boy by him and mee,
He was glad, I was woe,
Fortune changde made him so,
When he left his pretie boy,
Last his sorowe, first his ioy.*

*Weepe not my wanton smile vpon my knee:
When thou art olde ther's griefe inough for thee.*

*Streaming teares that neuer stint,
Like pearle drops from a flint,
Fell by course from his eyes,
That one anothers place supplies:
Thus he grieud in euerie part,
Teares of bloud fell from his hart,
When he left his pretie boy,
Fathers sorrow, fathers ioy.*

*Weepe not my wanton smile vpon my knee:
When thou art olde ther's griefe inough for thee.*

*The wanton smilde, father wept;
Mother cride, babie lept:
More he crowde, more we cride;
Nature could not sorowe bide.
He must goe, he must kisse
Childe and mother, babie blisse:
For he left his pretie boy,
Fathers sorowe, fathers ioy.*

*Weepe not my wanton smile vpon my knee:
When thou art olde ther's griefe inough for thee.*

With this lullaby the babie fell a sleepe, and Sephestia laying it vpon the greene grasse couered it with a mantle, and then leaning her head on her hand, and her elbow on her lap she fell a fresh to poure foorth abundance of plaintes, which Lamedon the old man espying, although in his face appeared the mappe of discontent, and in euerie wrinkle was a catalogue of woes, yet to cheere vp Sephestia, shrowding his inward sorrow with an outward smile, he began to comfort her in this manner.

Sephestia, thou seest no Phisick preuailes against the gaze of the Basilisckes, no charme against the sting of the Tarantula, no preuention to diuert the decree of the Fates, nor no meanes to recall backe the balefull hurt of Fortune: Incurable sores are without Auicens Aphorismes, and therefore no salue for them but patience. Then my Sephestia sith thy fal is high, and fortune low; thy sorrowes great, and thy hope little: seeing me partaker of thy miseries, set all thy rest vpon this, Solamen miseris, socios babuisse doloris. Chaunce is like Ianus double faced, as well full of smiles to comfort, as of frownes to dismay: the Ocean at his deadest ebbe returns to a full tide; when the Eagle meanes to soare highest, hee raiseth his flight in the lowest dales: so fareth it with fortune who in her highest extreames is most vnconstant: when the tempest of her wrath is most fearfull, then looke for a calme; when she beates thee with nettle, then thinke she will strewe thee with roses; when shee is most familiar with furies, her intent is to be most prodigall Sephestia. Thus are the arrowes of Fortune feathered with the plumes of the bird Halcione, that changeth colours with the Moone, which howsoever she shoothes them pierce not so deepe but they may bee cured. But Sephestia thou art daughter to a King, exiled by him from the hope of a crowne, banisht from the pleasures of the Court to the painfull fortunes of the countrey, parted for loue from him thou canst not but loue, from Maximus Sephestia, who for thee hath suffered so many disfauours, as either discontent or death can affoord. What of all this, is not hope the daughter of time? Haue not starres their fauourable aspects, as they haue froward opposition? Is there not a Jupiter as there is a Saturne? Cannot the influence of smiling Venus, stretch as farre as the frowning constitution of Mars? I tell thee Sephestia, Juno foldeth in her brows the volumes of the Destinies; whom melancholie Saturne deposeth from a Crowne, she mildlie aduanceth to a Diadem: then feare not, for if the mother liue in miserie, yet hath she a scepter for the sonne: let the vnkindnesse of thy father be buried in the cinders of obedience, and the want of Maximus be supplied with the presence of his pretie babe, who beeing too young for Fortune, lies smiling on thy knee and laughs at Fortune: learne by him Sephestia to vse patience, which is like the balme in the Vale of Iebosaphat, that findest no wound so deepe, but it cureth: thou seest alreadie Fortune begins to change her view, for after the great storme that rent our shippe, we found a calme that brought vs safe to shore; the mercie of Neptune was more than the enuie of Aeolus, and the discurtesie of thy father is proportioned with the fauour of the Gods. Thus Sephestia being co-partner of thy miserie, yet do I seeke to allay thy martyrdome: beeing sicke to my selfe, yet do I play the Phisition to thee, wishing thou maist beare thy sorrowes with as much content, as I brooke my misfortunes with patience. As hee was readie to goe forwarde with his perswasiuē argument, Sephestia fetching a deepe sigh, filling her tender eyes with teares, made this replie.

Sweete Lamedon, once partner of my royalties, now partaker of my wants, as constant in his extreame distresse, as faithfull in higher fortunes: the Turtle pearkeith not on barren trees, Doues delight not in foule cottages, the Lyon frequents no putrified haunts, friends followe not after pouertie, nor hath sinister chance anie drugges from the Phisitians, Nullus ad amissas ibit amicus opes: and yet Lamedon the misfortune of Sephestia abridgeth not our olde contracted amitie, thou temperest her exyle with thy banishment, and she sayling to Styx, thou ferriest ouer to Pblegeton: then Lamedon, saying as Andromache sayd to Hector Tu Dominus, tu vir, tu mibi frater eris. Thy aged yeres shalbe the calender of my fortunes, and thy gray haires the Paralells of mine actions. If Lamedon perswade Sephestia to content, Portia shall not excede Sephestia in patience; if he will her to keepe a low sayle, she will vayle al her sheete; if to forget her loues, shee will quench them with labours; if to accuse Venus as a foe, I wil hate Cupide as an enemie: and seeing the Destinies haue driuen thee from a crowne, I will rest satisfied with the Countrey, placing all my delights in honouring thee, and nursing vp my pretie wanton. I will imagine a small cottage to a spacious pallaice, and thinke as great quiet in a russet coate, as in royll habilliments: Sephestia Lamedon will not scorne with Juno to turne hir self into the shape of Semeles nurse, but vnknowne rest carelesse of my fortunes: the hope of times returne shal be the ende of my thoughts, the smiles of my sonne shall bee the nourishment of my hart, and the course of his youth shall be the comfort of my yeres; euerie laughter that leapes from his lookes, shall be the holiday of my conceiptes, and euerie teare, shal furnish out my greeues, and his fathers funeralls. I haue heard them say Lamedon, that the lowest shrubbes feele the least tempests, that in the valleis of Africa is heard no thunder, that in countrey roomes is greatest rest, and in little wealth the least disquiet: dignitie treadeth vpon glasse, and honour is like to the hearbe Synara, that when it bloometh most gorgeous, then it blasteth: Aulica vita splendida miseria, Courts haue golden dreames, but cotages sweet slum-bres: then Lamedon will I disguise my self, with my cloathes I will change my thoughts; for being poorelie attired I will be meanelie minded, and measure my actions by my present estate, not by former fortunes. In saying this the babe awakte and cride, and she fell to teares mixed with a lullabie.

All this while Menaphon sate amongst the shrubs fixing his eyes on the glorious obiect of her face, hee noted her tresses, which hee compared to the coloured Hia-cinth of Arcadia, her browes to the mountaine snowes that lie on the hils, her eyes to the gray glister of Titans gorgeous mantle, her alabaster necke to the whitenesse of his flockes, her teares to pearle, her face to borders of Lillies interseamed with Roses: to be briefe our shepheard Menaphon that heeretofore was an Atheist to loue, and as the Thessalian of Bacchus, so hee a contemner of Venus, was nowe by the wylie shaft of Cupid so intangled in the perfection and beauteous excellency of Septessia; as now he swore no beningne Planet but Venus, no God but Cupide, no exquisite deitie but Loue. Being thus fettered with the pliant perswasions of fancie, impatient in his newe affections, as the horse that neuer before felt the spurre, he could not bridle his new cōceaued amors, but watching when they shoulde depart, perceiuing by the gestures of the olde man, and the teares of the Gentlewoman, that they were distrest, thought to offer anie helpe that laie within the compasse of his abilitie. As thus he mused in his new passions, Lamedon and Sephestia rose vp, and resolued to take their course which way the winde blew: passing so downe the mountaine to goe seeke out some towne, at last they pacing softlie on, Lamedon espied Menaphon: desirous therefore to know the course of the countrey, hee saluted him thus.

Shepheard, for so farre thy attire warrants me; courteous, for so much thy countenance imports: if distresed persons whom Fortune hath wronged, and the seas haue fauored, (if we may count it fauour to liue and want) may without offence craue so farre ayde as to know some place where to rest our wearie and weather-beaten bones, our charges shall be paid, and you haue for recompence such thankes as Fortunes outlawes may yeeld to their faourers. Menaphon hearing him speak so grauelie, but not fitting his eare to his eye, stood staring still on Sephestias face, which shee perceiuing, flashed out such a blush frō her alabaster cheeks that they lookt like the ruddie gates of the Morning: this sweete bashfulnesse amazing Menaphon, at last hee began thus to answere.

Strangers, your degree I know not, therefore pardon if I giue lesse title thā your estates merit: Fortunes frownes are Princes fortunes, and Kings are subiect to chance and destinie. Mishap is to be salued with pitie, not scorne: and we that are Fortunes darlings, are bounde to relieuem them that are distrest: therefore follow me, and you shal haue such succour, as a shepheard may affoord. Lamedon and Sephestia were passing glad, and Menaphon led the way, not content onelie to feed his sight with the beautie of his new Mistres, but thought also to inferre some occasion of parley, to heare whether her voyce were as melodious, as her face beautiful, hee therefore prosecuted his prattle thus. Gentlewoman, when first I saw you sitting vpon the Arcadian Promontorie with your babie on your lappe, and this olde father by; I thought I had seene Venus with Cupide on her knee courted by Anchises of Troy: the excellence of your looks could discouer no lesse than Mars his paramour, and the beautie of the childe as much as the dignitie of her wanton: at last perceiuing by your teares and your childs shrikes, that ye were passengers distrest, I lent you sighes to partake your sorrowes, and luke warme drops to signifie how I pitie ouercharged persons, in lieu whereof let mee craue your name, countrey, and parentage. Sephestia seeing by the shepheards passionate lookes, that theswaine was halfe in loue, replyed thus; Curteous shepheard, if my blubbered cheeke did look like Venus at a blush, it was when the wofull Goddesse wept for her faire Adonis, my boye is no Cupide but the sonne of care, Fortunes fondling in his youth, to bee I hope her darling in his age: in that your looks saw our grieve, and your thoughts pitied our woes, our tonges shal giue thanks (the bountie of sorrowes tenants) and our hearts praye that the Gods may be as friendly to your flockes, as you fauourable to vs. My name is Samela, my countrey Cipres, my parentage meane, the wife of a poore Gentleman nowe deceased: how we arriued heere by shipwrack, gentle shepheard inquire not, least it be tedious for thee to heare it, and a double grieve for mee to rehearse it. The shepheard not daring displease his Mistres, as hauing loues thretes hanging on her lippes, he conueighed them home to his house: as soone as they were arriued there, he began at the dore to entertain them thus. Faire Mistres the flower of all our Nymphes that liue heere in Arcadia, this is my cotage wherein I liue content, and your lodging, where (please it you) ye may rest quiet. I haue not rich cloathes of Egypt to couer the walls, nor store of place to discouer anie wealth; for shepheards vse neither to be proud nor couetous: you shall find heere cheese and milke for dainties, and wooll for cloathing; in euerie corner of the house Content sitting smiling, and tempering euerie homelie thing with a welcome: this if ye can brooke and accept of, (as Gods allow the meanest hospitalitie) ye shall haue such welcome and fare as Philemon and Baucis gaue to Iupiter. Sephestia thankt him heartelie, and going into his house found what he promist: after that they had sate a little by the fire and were well warmed, they went to supper, where Sephestia fedde well, as one whom the sea had made hungrie, and Lamedon so plide his teeth, that all supper he speake not one word: after they had taken their repast, Menaphon seeing they were wearie, and that sleepe chimed on to rest, he let them see their lodging, and so gaue them the good night. Lamedon on his flocke bedde, and Sephestia on her countrey couch were so wearie, that they slept well: but Menaphon, poore Menaphon neither asked his swaynes for his sheepe, nor tooke his mole-spade on his necke to see his pastures; but as a man pained with a thousand passions, drenched in distresse, and ouerwhelmed with a multitude of vncouth cares, he sate like the pictures that Perseus tourned with his Gorgons head into stones. His sister Carmela kept his house, (for so was the Countrey wench called) and shee seeing her brother sit so malcontented, Stept to her cupboorde and fetcht a little beaten spice in an olde bladder, she sparke no euening milke, but went amongst the cream bowles, and made him a posset. But alas, Loue had so lockt vp the shepheards stomacke, that none would down with Menaphon: Carmela seeing her brother refuse his spicte drinke, thought all was not well, and therefore sate downe and wept; to be short, she blubbered and he sightht, and his men that came in and sawe their master with a kercher on his head mournde; so that amongst these swaines there was such melodie, that Menaphon tooke his bow and arrowes and went to bedde: where casting himselfe, he thought to haue beguiled his passions with some sweete slumbers. But Loue that smiled at his newe interteined champion, sitting on his beddes head, prickt him forward with new desires; charging Morpheus, Pbobotor, and Icolon the Gods of sleepe, to present vnto his closed eies the singular beautie and rare perfections of Samela: (for so will we now call her) in that the Idea of her excellence, forst him to breath out scalding sighes smothered within the fornace of his thoughts, which grew into this or the like passion.

I had thought Menaphon, that he which weareth the bay leafe had been free from lightening, and the Eagles penne a preseruatiue against thunder; that labour had been enemie to loue, and the eschewing of idlenesse an Antidote against fancie: but I see by proofe there is no adamant so harde, but the blood of a Goate will make soft; no fort so wel defenced, but strong batterie will enter; nor anie hart so pliant to restlesse labours, but enchantments of loue will ouercome. Vnfortunate Menaphon, that a late thoughtst Venus a strumpet and her sonne a bastard, now must thou offer incense at her shrine, and sweare Cupide no lesse than a God: thou hast reason Menaphon; for hee that liues without loue, liues without life; presuming as Narcissus to hate all, and beeing like him at length despised of all. Can there bee a sweeter blisse than beautie, a greater heauen than her heauenly perfections that is mistres of thy thoughts? If the sparkle of her eyes appeare in the night, the starres blush at her brightness: if her haire glister in the daye, Phæbus puts off his wreath of diamonds, as ouercome with the shine of her tresses; if she walke in the fields, Flora seeing her face, bids al her glorious flowers close themselues, as being by her beautie disgraced; if her alabaster necke appeere, then Hiems couereth his snowe, as surpassed in whitenesse. To be shorte Menaphon, if Samela had appeared in Ida, Iuno for maiestie, Pallas for wisedome, and Venus for beautie had let my Samela haue the supremacie: why shouldest thou not then loue, and thinke there is no life to loue, seeing the end of loue is the possession of such a heauenly Paragon? But what of this Menaphon hast thou anie hope to enjoy her person, she is a widdow, true, but too high for thy fortunes; she is in distresse, ah Menaphon, if thou hast anie sparke of comfort, this must set thy hope on fire. Want is the load stone of affection, distresse forceth deeper than Fortunes frownes, and such as are poore will rather loue than want reliefe, fortunes frownes are whetstones to fancie: and as the horse starteth at the spurre, so loue is prickt forward with distresse. Samela is shipwrackt, Menaphon relieues her; she wants, he supplies with wealth; he sues for loue, either must she grant, or buy deniall with perpetuall repentance. In this hope rested the poore shephearde, and with that Menaphon laide head downe the pillow and toke a sounnd nappe, sleeping out fancie, with a good slumber.

As soone as the sunne appeared the shepheard got him vp, and fed fat with this hope, went merely with his men to the foldes, and there letting foorth his sheepe, after that hee had appointed where they should graze, returned home, and looking when his guests should rise, hauing supt il the last night went roundly to his breakfast: by that time he had ended his desiune, Lamedon was gotten vp, and so was Samela. Against their rising Carmela had shewen her cookerie, and Menaphon tired in his russet iacket, his redde sleevees of chamlet, his blew bonnet, and his round slop of countrey cloth, bestirred him, as euerie ioynt had been set to a sundrie office. Samela no sooner came out of her chamber, but Menaphon as one that claimed pitie for his passions, bad her good morrow with a firme louers looke: Samela knowing the fowle by the feather, was able to cast his disease without his water, perceiued that Cupide had caught the poore shepheard in his net, and vnles he sought quickly to break out of the snare would make him a tame foole: faire lookes she gaue him, and with a smiling sorow discouered how she grieued at his misfortune, and yet faoured him. Well, to breakfast they went Lamedon and Samela fed hard, but Menaphon like the Argiue in the Date gardens of Arabia, liued with the contemplation of his Mistres beautie: the Salamander liueth not without the fire, the Herring from the water, the Mole from the earth, nor the Cameleon from the aire, nor coulde Menaphon liue from the sight of his Samela; whose breath was perfumed aire, whose eyes were fire wherein he delighted to dallie, whose heart the earthlie Paradice wherein hee desired to ingraffe the essence of his loue and affection: thus did the poore shepheard bathe in a kinde of blisse, whiles his eye feeding on his mistres face, did surfet with the excellencie of her perfection. So long he gazde, that at length breakfast was ended, and he desirous to doo her anie seruice, first put her childe to nurse, and then led her forth to see his folds; thinking with the sight of his flockes to inueigle her, whose minde had rather haue chosen anie misfortune, than haue deined her eyes on the face and feature of so lowe a peasant. Well, abroad they went, Menaphon with his sheepooke fringed with cruell, to signifie he was chiefe of the swaynes, Lamedon and Samela after: plodding thus ouer the greene fields, at last they came to the mountains where Menaphōs flockes grazed, and there he discoursed vnto Samela thus; I tell thee faire Nymph, these Plaines that thou seest stretching Southward, are pastures belonging to Menaphon: there growes the cintfoyle, and the hyacinth, the cowslopp, the primrose, and the violet, which my flockes shall spare for flowers to make thee garlands, the milke of my ewes shall be meate for thy pretie wanton, the wool of the fat weathers that seemes as fine as the fleece that Iason fet from Colchos, shall serue to make Samela webbes withall; the mountaine tops shall be thy mornings walke, and the shadie valleies thy euennings arbour: as much as Menaphon owes shall be at Samelas command, if she like to liue with Menaphon. This was spoken with such deepe effects, that Samela could scarce keepe her from smiling, yet she couered her conceipt with a sorrowful countenance, which Menaphon espying, to make her merrie, and rather for his own aduantage, seeing Lamedon was a sleepe, tooke her by the hand and sate downe, and pulling foorth his pipe, began after some melodie to carroll out this roundelay.

Menaphons roundelay.

*When tender ewes brought home with euening Sunne Wend to their foldes,
And to their holdes
The shepbeards trugde when light of day is done.
Vpon a tree
The Eagle loues faire bird did pearch,
There resteth bee.
A little flie his harbor then did search,
And did presume (thouḡh others laught thereat)
To pearch where as the princelie Eagle sat.*

*The Eagle frownd, and shooke her royall wings;
And chargde the Flie
From thence to bie:
Afraid in hast the little creature flings,
Yet seekes againe
Fearfull to pearke him by the Eagles side.
With moodie vaine
The speedie post of Ganimede replide;
Vassaile auant or with my wings you die,
Ist fit an Eagle seate him with a Flie?*

*The Flie craude pitie, still the Eagle frownde,
The sillie Flie
Readie to die
Disgracie, displaite, fell groueling to the ground.*

*The Eagle sawe
 And with a royll minde said to the Flie,
 Be not in awe,
 I scorne by me the meanest creature die;
 Then seate thee heere: the ioyfull Flie vp flings,
 And sate safe shadowed with the Eagles wings.*

As soone as Menaphon had ended this roundelay, turning to Samela, after a countrey blush, he began to court her in this homely fashion; What thinke you Samela of the Eagle for this royll deede? That he falsified the olde Prouerbe Aquila non capit muscas. But I meane Samela are you not in opinion, that the Eagle giues instance of a princelie resolution, in preferring the safetie of a Flie before the credit of her royll Maiestie? I thinke Menaphon that high minds are the shelters of pouertie, and Kings seates are couerts for distressed persons; that the Eagle in shrowding the Flie did well, but a little forgot her honour. But how thinke you Samela, is not this proportion to be obserued in loue? I gesse no, for the Flie did it not for loue, but for succour. Hath loue then respect of circumstance? Els it is not loue, but lust; for where the parties haue no sympathie of Estates, there can no firme loue be fixed; discord is reputed the mother of diuision, and in nature this is an vnrefuted principle, that it falteth which faileth in vniiformitie. He that grafteth Lillyflowers vpon the Nettle marreth the smell; who coueteth to tie the Lambe and the Lion in one tedder maketh a brawle; equall fortunes are loues faourites, and therefore shoulde fancie bee always limittted by Geometricall proportion; least if young matchinge with olde, fire and frost fall at a combate: and if rich with poore there happe manie daungerous and brauing objections. Menaphon halfe nipte in the pate with this replie, yet like at all souldier stoode to his tackling, and made this aunswere; Suppose gentle Samela, that a man of meane estate, whome disdainefull Fortune had abased, intending to make hir power prodigall in his misfortunes, being feathered with Cupides bolt, were snared in the beautie of a Queene, should he rather die than discouer his amors? If Queens (quoth she) were of my mind, I had rather die, thā perish in baser fortunes. Venus loued Vulcan replied Menaphon: truth quoth Samela, but though he was polt-footed, yet he was a God. Phaon enjoyed Sapho he a Ferriman that liued by his hands thrift, she a Princesse that fate inuested with a diadem. The more fortunate quoth Samela was he in his honours, and she the lesse famous in her honestie. To leaue these instances replied Menaphon, (for loue had made him hardie) I sweete Samela inferre these presupposed premisses, to discouer the basenesse of my mean birth, and yet the deepnesse of my affection, who euer since I saw the brightnesse of your perfection shining vpon the moūtains of Arcadie, like the glister of the Sunne vpon the toplesse Promontorie of Sicilia, was so snared with your beautie, and so inueigled with the excellēce of that perfection that exceedeth all excellencie, that loue entring my desire, hath mainteined himselfe by force; that vnlesse sweete Samela grant me fauour of her loue, and play the princelie Eagle, I shall with the poore Flie perish in my Fortunes: he concludē this period with a deepe sigh, and Samela grieuing at this follie of the Shephearde, gaue him mildelie this aunswere.

Menaphon my distressed haps are the resolutions of the Destinies, and the wrongs of my youth, are the forerunners of my woes in age; my natvie home is my worst nurserie, and my friends denie that which strangers preiudicallie grant: I arriued in Arcady shipwrackt, and Menaphon fauouring my sorrowes hath affoorded me succours, for which Samela rests bound, and will prooue thankfull: as for loue, knowe that Venus standeth on the Tortoys, as shewing that Loue creepeth on by degrees; that affection is like the Snayle, which stealtheth to the top of the lance by minutes: the grasse hath his increase, yet neuer anie sees it augment, the Sonne shadowes, but the motion is not seene; loue like those should enter into the eye, and by long gradations passe into the heart; Cupid hath wings to flie, not that loue should be swift, but that he may soare high to auoyd base thoughts. The Topace being throwne into the fire burneth straight, but no sooner out of the flame but it freezeth; strawe is soone kindled, but it is but a blaze; and loue that is caught in a moment, is lost in a minute: giue me leauue then Menaphon first to sorrow for my fortunes, then to call to minde my husbands late funeralls, then if the Fates haue assigned I shall fancie, I will account of thee before anie shepheard in Arcadie. This conclusion of Samela draue Menaphon into such an extasie for ioy, that he stood as a man metamorphozed; at last calling his senses together, hee tolde her he rested satisfied with her answere, and therupon lent her a kisse, such as blushing Thetis receaues from her choycest lemmann. At this Lamedon awakte, otherwise Menaphon no doubt had replied, but breaking off their talk they went to view their pastures, and so passing downe to the place where the sheepe grazed, they searched the shepheards bagges, and so emptied their bottles as Samela meruailed at such an vncouth banquet: at last they returned home, Menaphon glorying in the hope of his successe, interteining Samela still with such courtesie, that shee finding such cōtent in the cotage, began to despise the honors of the Court. Resting thus in house with the shepheard, to auoide tedious conceipts she framed her selfe so to countrey labours, that she oft times would lead the flocks to the fieldes her selfe, and being drest in homelie attire, she seemd like Oenone that was amorous of Paris. As she thus often traced alongſt the Plaines, she was noted amongst the shepheardeſ of one Doron next neighbour to Menaphon, who entered into the conſideration of her beautie, and made report of it to all his fellow swaines, so that they chatted nought in the fields but of the new shepheardeſſe. One daye amongst the rest, it chaunced that Doron ſitting in parley with another countrey companion of his, amidſt other tattle, they prattled of the beautie of Samela. Hast thou ſeene her quoth Melicertus, (for ſo was his friend called) I quoth Doron and ſighth to ſee her, not that I was in loue, but that I greeued ſhee ſhuld be in loue with ſuch a one as Menaphon. What mauner of woman is ſhee quoth Melicertus? As well as I can anſwered Doron I will make deſcription of her.

Dorons deſcription of Samela.

Like to Diana in her Summer weede Girt with a crimson roabe of brightest die, goes faire Samela.

*Whiter than be the flockes that ſtraggling feede,
When washt by Arethusa faint they lie:
is faire Samela.*

*As faire Aurora in her morning gray Deckt with the ruddie glister of her loue,
is faire Samela.*

*Like louelie Thetis on a calmed day,
When as her brightnesse Neptunes fancie moue, shines faire Samela.*

*Her tresses gold, her eyes like glassie streames,
Her teeth are pearle, the breasts are yuorie of faire Samela.*

*Her cheekes like rose and lilly yeeld foorth gleames,
Her browes bright arches framde of ebonie:
Thus faire Samela.*

*Passeth faire Venus in her brauest biew,
And Iuno in the shew of maiestie, for she's Samela.*

*Pallas in wit, all three if you well view,
For beautie, wit, and matchlesse dignitie
yeeld to Samela.*

Thou hast quoth Melicertus made such a description, as if Priamus young boy should paint out the perfection of his Greekish Paramour. Me thinkes the Idea of her person represents it selfe an obiect to my fantasie, and that I see in the discouerie of her excellencie, the rare beauties of: and with that he broke off abruptlie with such a deepe sigh, as it seemed his heart should haue broken; sitting as the Lapithes when they gazed on Medusa. Doron meruailing at this sodayne euent, was halfe afraid, as if some appoplexie had astonied his senses, so that cheering vp his friend, he demanded what the cause was of this sodaine conceipt. Melicertus no niggarde in discouerie of his fortunes, began thus. I tell thee Doron before I kept sheepe in Arcadie, I was a Shepheard else where, so famous for my flockes, as Menaphon for his foldes; beloued of the Nymphes, as hee likte of the Countrey Damzells; coueting in my loues to vse Cupids wings, to soare high in my desires, though my selfe were borne to base fortunes. The Hobbie catcheth no pray, vnlesse she mount beyonde her marke, the Palme tree beareth most bowes where it groweth highest, and Loue is most fortunate where his courage is resolute, and thought beyond his compasse. Grounding therefore on these principles, I fixte mine eye on a Nymph, whose parentage was great, but her beautie farre more excellent, her birth was by manie degrees greater than mine, and my woorth by manie discents lesse than hers: yet knowing Venus loued Adonis, and Luna Endymion, that Cupide had boltes feathered with the plumes of a Crowe, as well as with the pennes of an Eagle, I attempted and courted her, I found her lookes lightening disdaine, and her forehead to conteine fauours for others, and frownes for me: when I alledged faith, she crost me with Aeneas, when loyaltie, she tolde me of Iason; whē I swore constancie, shee questioned me of Demophoon; when I craued a finall resolution to my fatall passions, shee filde her browes full of wrinkles, and her eyes full of furie, turned her backe, and shooke me off with a Non placet. Thus in loues I lost loues, and for her loue had lost all, had not when I neere despaired the clemencie of some curteous starre, or rather the verie excellence of my Mistres fauours salued my halfe despairing maladie: for shee seeing that I helde a superstitious opinion of loue, in honouring him for a Deitie, not in counting him a vaine conceit of Poetrie; that I thought it sacriledge to wrong my desires, and the baseſt fortune to inhance my fortune by falsing my loues to a woman, she left from being so rammage, and gentle came to the fist, and granted me those fauours shee might affoord, or my thoughts desire: with this he ceast and fell againe to his sighes, which Doron noting, answered thus. If (my good Meli-certus) thou didst enjoy thy loues, what is the occasion thou beginnest with sighes, and endest with passions.

Ah Doron there endes my ioyes, for no sooner had I triumph't in my fauours, but the trophies of my fortunes fell like the hearbes in Syria, that flourish in the morne, and fade before night; or like vnto the flie Tyryma, that taketh life and leaueth it all in one day. So my Doron did it fare with me, for I had no sooner enjoyed my loue, but the heauens eniuious a shepheard should haue the fruition of such a heauenly Paragon, sent vnreuocable Fates to deprive me of her life, and shee is dead: dead Doron, to her, to my selfe, to all, but not to my memorie, for so deepe were the characters stamped in my inwarde senses, that obliuion can neuer race out the forme of her excellency. And with that he start vp, seeking to fall out of those dumpes with Musique, (for he plaid on his pipe certaine sonets he had contriued in praise of the countrey wenches) but plaine Doron as plaine as a packstaffe, desired him to sound a roundelay, and he would sing a song, which he carolled to this effect.

Dorons Iigge.

*Through the shrubbes as I can cracke,
For my Lambes little ones,
Mongst many pretie ones,
Nimpes I meane, whose haire was blacke*

*As the crow:
Like the snow*

Her face and browes shinde I weene:

I saw a little one,

A bonny prety one,

As bright, buxsome and as sheene

As was shee,

On bir knee

That lulld the God, whose arrowes warmes

Such merry little ones,

Such faire fac'd prety ones,

As dally in Loues chiefest barmes,

Such was mine:

Whose gray eyne

Made me loue. I gan to woo

This sweete little one,

This bonny pretie one.

I wooed hard a day or two,

Till she bad;

Be not sad,

Wooe no more I am thine owne,

Thy dearest little one,

Thy truest pretie one:

Thus was faith and firme loue showne,

As behoues

Shepbeards loues.

How like you this Dittie of mine owne deuising, quoth Doron? As well as my musique replied Melicertus; for if Pan and I striue, Midas being Judge, and should happe to giue me the garland, I doubt not but his Asses eares should be doubled: but Doron so long we dispute of loue, and forget our labours, that both our flockes shall be vnfolded, and tomorrow our merrie meeting hindered. Thats true quoth Doron, for there will be all the shepheards Daughters and countrey Damzels, and amongst them feare not but Menaphon will bring his faire Shepheardesse, there Melicertus shalt thou see her that will amate all our moodes, and amaze thee, and therefore good Melicertus let vs be going. With this prattle away they went to their foldes, where we leaue them, and returne to Menaphon, who triumphing in the hope of his new loues, caused Samela to tricke her vp in her countrey attire, and make her selfe braue against the meeting: she that thought, to be coye were to discouer her thoughts, drest her selfe vp in Carmelas russet cassocke, and that so quaintly, as if Venus in a countrey peticoate had thought to wanton it with her louely Adonis. The morow came, and away they went, but Lamedon was left behinde to keep the house. At the houre appointed, Menaphon, Carmela and Samela came, when all the rest were readie making merie. As soone as word was brought, that Menaphon came with his newe Mistres, all the companie began to murmur, and euery man to prepare his eye for so miraculous an obiect: but Pesana a heardsmans daughter of the same parish, that long had loued Menaphon, and he had filled her browes with frownes, her eyes with furie, and her heart with grieve; yet coueting in so open an assemblie, as well as shee coulde to hide a pad in the straw, she expected as others did the arriuall of her newe corriuall: who at that instant came with Menaphon into the house. No sooner was she entred the Parlour, but her eyes gaue such a shine, and her face such a brightnesse, that they stood gazing on this Goddessesse; and shee vnacquainted, seeing her selfe among so manie vnknownen swaines, died her cheeke with such a vermillion blush, that the countrey maides themselues fel in loue with his faire Nymph, and could not blame Menaphon for being ouer the shooes with such a beautifull creature. Doron iogde Melicertus on the elbowe, and so awakte him out of a dreame, for he was deeply drownd in the contemplation of her excellencie; sending out vollies of sighs in remembrance of his old loue, as thus hee sate meditating on her fauour, how much she resembled her that death had depriued him off: well her welcome was great of all the companie, and for that she was a stranger they graced her to make her the mistres of the Feast. Menaphon seeing Samela thus honoured, conceiued no smal content in the aduancing of his Mistres, being passing ioconde and pleasant with the rest of the companie, insomuch that euerie one perceiued howe the poore swayne fedde vpon the dignities of his Mistres graces. Pesana noting this began to lowre, and Carmela winking vpon her fellowes, answered her frownes with a smile, which doubled her grieve; for womens paines are more pinching if they be girded with a frumpe, than if they be galled with a mischiefe. Whiles thus there was banding of such lookes, as euerie one imported as much as an impreso, Samela willing to see the fashion of these countrey yong frowes, cast her eyes abroad, and in viewing euerie face, at last her eyes glaunced on the lookes of Melicertus; whose countenance resembled so vnto her dead Lord, that as a woman astonied she stood staring on his face, but ashamed to gaze vpon a stranger, she made restraint of her looks, and so taking her eye from one particular obiect, she sent it abroad to make generall survey of their countrey demeanours. But amidst all this gazing, he that had seene poore Menaphon, how infected with a iealous furie, he stared each man in the face, fearing their eyes should feede or surfet on his Mistres beautie: if they glaunst, he thought straight they would be riualls in his loues; if they flatlie lookt, then they were deeply snared in affection; if they once smiled on her, they had receyued some glance from Samela that made them so malepart; if she laught, she likte; and at that he began to frowne: thus sate poore Menaphon all dinner while pained with a thousande iealous passions, keeping his teeth garders of his stomacke, and his eyes watchmen of his loues, but Melicertus halfe impatient of his new conceiued thoughts, determined to trie how the Damzell was brought vp, and whether she was as wise as beautifull, hee therefore began to breake silence thus.

The Orgies which the Bacchanals kept in Thessaly, the Feasts which the melancholy Saturnists foūded in Danuby, were neuer so quatted with silence, but on their festiual daies they did frolicke amongst themselues with manie pleasaunt parlies: were it no a shame then that we of Arcadie, famous for the beautie of our Nymphes, and the amorous roundelaies of our shepheards, shoulde disgrace Pans holiday with such melancholy dumpes: curteous countrey Swaines shake off this sobrietie, and seeing we haue in our companie Damzels both beautifull and wise, let vs interteine them with prattle, to trie our wittes, and tire our time; to this they all agreed with a plaudite. Then quoth Melicertus; by your leauue since I was first in motion, I will be first in question, and therefore new come shepheardesse first to you: at this Samela blusht, and he began thus.

Faire Damzel, when Nereus chatted with Juno, he had pardon, in that his prattle came more to plesure the Goddess than to ratifie his owne presumption: if I Mistres be ouerbold, forgiue me; I question not to offend, but to set time free from tediousnesse. Then gentle shepheardesse tell me, if you should bee transformed through the anger of the Gods, into some shape; what creature would you reason to be in forme? Samela blushing that she was the first that was boorded, yet gathered vp her crums, and desirous to shew her pregaunt wit, (as the wisest women be euer tickled with self loue) made him this answere.

Gentle shepheard, it fits not strangers to be nice, nor maidens too coy; least the one feele the weight of a scoffe, the other the fall of a frumpe: pithie questions are mindes whetstones, and by discoursing in iest, manie doubts are deciphered in earnest: therefore you haue forestalled me in crauing pardon, when you haue no neede to feele anie grant of pardon. Therefore thus to your question; Daphne I remember was turned to a bay tree, Niobe to a flint, Lampetia and her sisters to flowers, and sundrie Virgins to sundrie shapes according to their merites; but if my wish might serue for a Metamorphosis, I would be turned into a sheepe. A sheepe, and why so Mistres? I reason thus quoth Samela, my supposition should be simple, my life quiet, my food the pleasant Plaines of Arcadie and the wealthie riches of Flora, my drinke the coole streames that flowe from the concave Promontorie of this Continent, my aire should bee cleere, my walkes spacious, my thoughts at ease, and can there none shepheard be my better premisses to conclude my replie than these? But haue you no other allegations to confirme your resolution? Yes sir quoth she, and farre greater. Then the law of our first motion quoth hee commands you to repeate them. Farre be it answered Samela that I should not doo of free will anie thing that this pleasant companie commands: therefore thus; Were I a sheepe, I should bee garded from the foldes with iollie Swaines, such as was Lunas Loue on the hills of Latmos; their pipes sounding like the melodie of Mercurie, when he lulld asleepe Argus: but more, when the Damzells tracing along the Plaines, should with their eyes like Sunne bright beames, drawe on lookes to gaze on such sparkling Planets: then wearie with foode, shoulde I lye and looke on their beauties, as on the spotted wealthē of the richest Firmament; I should listen to their sweete layes, more sweete than the Sea-borne Syrens: thus feeding on the delicacie of their features, I should like the Tyrian heyfer fall in loue with Agenors darling. I but quoth Melicertus, those faire facde Damzells oft draw foorth the kindest sheepe to the shambles. And what of that sir aunswered Samela, would not a sheepe so long fed with beautie, die for loue. If he die (quoth Pesana) it is more kindnes in beasts, than constancie in men: for they die for loue, when larkes die with leekes. If they be so wise quoth Menaphon, they shew but their mother witts; for what sparkes they haue of inconstancie, they drawe from their female fosterers, as the Sea dooth ebbes and tides from the Moone. So be it sir answered Pesana, then no doubt your mother was made of a Weathercocke, that brought foorth such a wauering companion: for you master Menaphon measure your looks by minutes and your loues are like lightning, which no sooner flash on the eie, but they vanish. It is then quoth Menaphon because mine eye is a foolish Iudge, and chooseth too baselie: which when my heart censures of, it casts away as refuse. Twere best thē said Pesana, to discharge such vniust Judges of ther seates, and to set your eares hearers of your loue pleas. If they fault quoth

Melicertus, euerie market towne hath a remedie, or els there is neuer a Baker neere by seauen miles. Stay curteous Shepheards quoth Samela, these iestes are too broade before, they are cynicall like Diogenes quippes, that had large feathers and sharpe heads, it little fits in this companie to bandie taunts of loue, seeing you are vnwedded and these all maidens addicted to chastitie. You speake well as a Patronesse of our credite quoth Pesana, for indeede we be virgins, and addicted to virginitie. Now quoth Menaphon that you haue got a virgin in your mouth you wil neuer leauie chaunting that word, till you prooue your selfe either a Vestall or a Sybill. Suppose she were a Vestall quoth Melicertus, I had almost said a virgine (but God forbidde I had made such a doubtfull supposition) shee might carrie water with Amulia in a sieue: for amongst all the rest of the virgins we read of none but her that wrought such a miracle. Pesana hearing how pleasantly Melicertus plaid with her nose, thought to giue him as great a bone to gnaw vpon, which she cast in his teeth thus briefelie.

I remember sir that Epicurus measured euerie mans diet by his owne principles; Abadas the great Macedonian Pirate, thought euerie one had a letter of Marte, that bare sayles in the Ocean; none came to knocke at Diogenes tub but was supposed a Cinick; and fancie a late hath so tied you to his vanities, that you will thinke Vesta a flat figured conceipt of Poetrie. Samela perceiuing these blowes woulde growe to deepe wounds, broke off their talke with this prety digression. Gentlemen, to end this strife, I praye you let vs heare the opinion of Doron, for all this while neither he nor Carmela haue vttered one word, but sate as Censers of our pleas; twere necessarie he tolde vs how his heart came thus on his halfepenie. Doron hearing Samela thus pleasaunt, made presentlie this blunt replie; I was faire Mistres in a solempne doubt with my selfe, whether in beeing a sheepe, you would be a Ram or an Ewe? An Ewe no doubt quoth Samela, for hornes are the heauiest burden that the head can beare. As Doron was readie to replie, came in sodainly to this parley foure or fие olde shepheards, who broke off their prattle, that from that they fel to drinking: and so after some parley of their flocks, euerie one departed to their own home where they talked of the exquisite perfection of Samela, especially Melicertus, who gotten to his owne cotage, and lyen downe in his couch by himselfe, began to ruminante on Samelas shape.

Ah Melicertus, what an obiect fortune this day brought to thy eyes, presenting a strange Idea to thy sight, as appeared to Achilles of his dead friend Patreclus, tresses of gold like the tramels of Sephestias lockes, a face fairer than Venus, such was Sephestia; her eye paints her out Sephestia, her voyce sounds her out Sephestia, she seemeth none but Sephestia: but seing she is dead, and there liueth not such another Sephestia, sue to her and loue her, for that it is either a selfe same or another Sephestia. In this hope Melicertus fel to his slumber, but Samela was not so content: for shee began thus to muse with her selfe; May this Melicertus be a shepheard? or can a countrie cotage affoord such perfection? doth this coast bring forth such excellencie? then happie are the virgins shall haue such suters, and the wiues such pleasing husbands; but his face is not inchachte with anie rusticke proportion, his browes containe the characters of nobilitie, and his lookes in shepheards weeds are Lordlie, his voyce pleasing, his wit full of gentrie: weigh all these equallie, and consider Samela is it not thy Maximus? Fond foole away with these suppositions; could the dreaming of Andromache call Hector from his graue? or can the vision of my husband raise him from the seas? Tush stoop not to such vanities: hee is dead, and therefore grieue not thy memorie with the imagination of his new reuie, for there hath been but one Hippolitus found to be Virbius, twise a man, to salue Samela than this suppose; if they court thee with hyacinth, interteine them with roses; if he send thee a lambe, present him an eawe; if he wooe, he wooed; and for no other reason, but, hee is like Maximus. Thus she rested, and thus she slept, all parties being equally content and satisfied with hope except Pesana, who fettered with the feature of her best beloued Menaphon sate cursing Cupide as a partiall Deitie, that would make more daye light in the Firmament than one Sunne, more rainebowes in the heauen than one Iris, and more loues in one heart than one settled passion: manie praiers she made to Venus for reuenge, manie vowes to Cupide, manie orizons to Hymeneus, if shee might possesse the type of her desires. Well poore soule, howsoever she was paid, she smothered all with patience, and thought to braue loue with seeming not to loue; and thus she daily droue out the time with labour, and looking to her heard, hearing euerie day by Doron who was her kinsman, what successe Menaphon had in his loues. Thus Fates and Fortune dallying a dolefull Catastrophe, to make a more pleasing Epitazis, it fell out amongst them thus. Melicertus going to the fields, as he was wont to doo with his flockes, droue to graze as neere the swaines of Menaphon as he might, to haue a view of his new enterteined Mistres; who, according to his expectation came thether euerie day. Melicertus esteeming her to bee some Farmers daughter at the most, could not tell how to court her: yet at length calling to remembrance her rare wit discouered in her last discourses, finding opportunitie to giue her both bal and racket, seeing the coast was cleere, and that none but Samela and he were in the field, he left his flocke in the valley, and stept vnto her, and saluted her thus.

Mistres of al eyes that glance but at the excellencye of your perfection, soueraigne of all such as Venus hath allowed for louers, Oenones ouermatch, Arcadies comet, beauties second comfort; all haile: seeing you sit like Juno when shee first watchte her white heyfer on the Lincen downes, as bright as siluer Phæbe mounted on the high top of the ruddie element, I was by a strange attractiue force drawne, as the adamant draweth the yron, or the ieat the straw, to visite your sweete selfe in the shade, and affoord you such companie as a poore swaine may yeeld without offence; which if you shall vouch to deigne of, I shall be as glad of such accepted seruice, as Paris first was of his best beloued Paramour. Samela looking on the shephearde's face, and seeing his vtterance full of broken sighes, thought to bee pleasant with her shepheard thus. Arcadies Apollo, whose brightness draws euerie eye to turne as the Heliotropion doth after her load; fairest of the shepheards, the Nymphes sweetest obiect, womens wrong, in wronging manie with ones due; welcome, and so welcome, as we vouchsafe of your seruice, admitte of your companie, as of him that is the grace of al companies; and if we durst vpon any light pardon, woulde venter to request you shew vs a cast of your cunning. Samela made this replie, because she heard him so superfine, as if Epbæbus had learnd him to refine his mother tongue, wherefore thought he had done it of an inkhorne desire to be eloquent; and Melicertus thinking that Samela had learnt with Lucilla in Athens to anotamize wit, and speake none but Similes, imagined she smoothed her talke to be thought like Sapho Phaos Paramour. Thus deceiued either in others suppositions, Samela followed her sute thus; I know that Priamus wanton could not be without flockes of Nymphes to follow him in the Vale of Ida, beautie hath legions to attende her excellence if the shepheard be true; if like Narcissus you wrap not your face in the cloude of disdaine, you cannot but haue some rare Paragon to your Mistres, whome I woulde haue you in some sonnet describe. Ioues last loue, if Ioue coulde get from Juno, my pipe shal presume and I aduenture with my voice to set out my Mistres fauour for your excellence to censure of, and therefore thus. Yet Melicertus for that hee had a farther reach, would not make anie clownish description, chanted it thus cunningly.

Melicertus description of his Mistres.

*Tune on my pipe the praises of my Loue,
And midst thy oaten harmonie recount
How faire she is that makes thy musicke mount,
And euerie string of thy hearts harpe to moue.*

*Shall I compare her forme unto the speare Whence Sun-bright Venus vaunts her siluer shine?
Ab more than that by iust compare is thine,
Whose Christall lookes the cloudie beauens doo cleare.*

*How oft haue I descending Titan seene
His burning lockes couch in the Sea-queenes lap,
And beauteous Thetis his red bodie wrap
In watrie robes, as he her Lord had been.*

*Whben as my Nymph impatient of the night
Bad bright Atræus with his traine giue place,
Wbiles she led foorth the day with her faire face,
And lent each starre a more than Delian light.*

*Not Ioue or Nature should they both agree
To make a woman of the Firmament,
Of his mixt puritie could not inuent
A Skie borne forme so beautifull as she.*

When Melicertus had ended this roundelay in prayse of his Mistres, Samela perceiued by his description, that either some better Poet than himselfe had made it, or else that his former phrase was dissembled: wherefore to trie him thoroughly, and to see what snake laye hidden vnder the grasse, she followed the chase in this manner.

Melicertus, might not a straunger craue your Mistres name. At this the shepheard blusht, and made no reply. How now quoth Samela, what is she meane that you shame, or so high as you fear to bewray the souereign of your thoughts? Stand not in doubt man, for be she base, I reade that mightie Tamberlaine after his wife Zenocrate (the worlds faire eye) past out of the Theater of this mortall life, he chose stigmatical trulls to please his humorous fancie. Be she a princesse, honour hangs in high desires, and it is the token of a high minde to venter for a Queene: then gentle shepheard tell me thy

Mistres name. Melicertus hearing his goddesse speake so fauourably, breathed out this sodaine replie; Too high Samela, and therefore I feare with the Syrian Wolues to barke against the Moone, or with them of Scyrum to shoot against the starres; in the height of my thoughts soaring too high, to fall with wofull repenting Icarus: no sooner did mine eye glance vpon her beautie, but as if loue and fate had sate to forge my fatall disquiet, they trape mee within her lookes, and haling her Idea through the passage of my sight, placde it so deeply in the center of my heart, as maugre al my studious indeuour it still and euer will keepe restlesse possession: noting her vertues, her beauties, her perfections, her excellency, and feare of her too high born parentage, although painfully fettered, yet haue I still feared to dare so haute an attempt to so braue a personage; least she offensiuie at my presumption, I perish in the height of my thoughts. This conclusion broken with an abrupt passion, could not so satisfie Samela but she would bee further inquisitiue. At last after manie questions, he answered thus; seeing Samela I consume my selfe, and displease you; to hazarde for the salue that maye cure my malady, and satisfie your question, know it is the beauteous Samela. Be there more of that name in Ar-cady beside my selfe quoth she. I know not qd Melicertus, but wer there a million, onely you are Melicertus Samela. But of a million quoth she, I cannot be Melicertus Samela, for loue hath but one arrowe of desire in his quiuier, but one string to his bow, and in choyce but one aime of affection. Haue ye alreadie quoth Melicertus set your rest vpõ some higher personage? No quoth Samela, I meane by your selfe, for I haue hearde that your fancie is linked alreadie to a beautiful shepherdesse in Arcadie. At this the pore swaine tainted his cheeks with a vermillion die, yet thinking to carrie out the matter with a iest, he stood to his tackling thus; Whosoeuer Samela descanted of that loue, tolde you a Canterbury tale; some propheticall full mouth that as he were a Coblers eldest sonne, would by the laste tell where anothers shooe wrings, but his sowterly aime was iust leuell, in thinking euerie looke was loue, or euerie faire worde a pawne of loyaltie. Then quoth Samela taking him at a rebound, neither may I thinke your glaunces to be fancies, nor your greatest protestation any assurance of deepe affection: therefore ceasing off to court any further at this time, thinke you haue prooued your selfe a tall souldier to continue so long at batterie, and that I am a fauorable foe that haue continued so long a parley; but I charge you by the loue you owe your deerest Mistres, not to say any more as touching loue for this time. If Samela quoth hee, thou hadst enioyned me as Iuno did to Hercules, most daungerous labours, I would haue discouered my loue by obedience, and my affection by death: yet let me craue this, that as I begunne with a Sonnet, so I may ende with a Madrigale. Content Melicertus quoth she, for none more than I loue Musique. Vpon this replie the shepheard proud folowed this Dittie.

Melicertus Madrigale.

What are my sheepe without their wonted food?
What is my life except I gaine my Loue?
My sheepe consume and faint for want of blood.
My life is lost unlesse I grace approue.

No flower that saplesse tbriues:
No Turtle without pbeare.

*The day without the Sunne dooth lowre for woe,
Then woe mine eyes vntesse they beautie see:
My Sunne Samelaes eyes, by whom I know Wherin delight consists, where pleasures be.*

*Nought more the heart reuies
Than to imbrace his deare.*

*The starres from earthly humors gaine their light,
Our humors by their light possesse their power:
Samelaes eyes fedde by my weeping sight,
Insues my paine or ioyes by smile, or lower.
So wends the source of loue.
It feedes, it failes, it ends.*

*Kinde lookes cleare to your ioy beholde her eyes,
Admire her heart, desire to taste her kisses;
In them the heauen of ioy and solace lies,
Without them evry hope his succour misses.
Oh how I loue to prooue Whereto this solace tends.*

Scarce had the shepheard ended this Madrigale, but Samela began to frowne, saying he had broken promise. Melicertus alledged if he had vtred any passion, twas sung, not said. Thus these Louers in a humorous descent of their prattle espied a farre off olde Lamedon and Menaphon comming towards them; wherevpon kissing in conceipt, and parting with interchaunged glaunces, Melicertus stole to his sheepe, and Samela sate her downe making of nets to catche birds. At last Lamedon and her Loue came, and after manie gracious lookes, and much good parley, helpte her home with her sheepe, and put them in the folds. But leauing these amorous shep-

heardes busie in their loues, let vs retourne at length to the pretie babie Samelas childe, whom Menaphō had put to nurse in the countrey. This infant being by Nature beautifull, and by birth noble, euen in his cradle exprest to the eyes of the gazers such glorious presages of his approaching fortunes, as if another Alcides (the arme-strong darling of the doubled night) by wrastling with snakes in his swadling cloutes, should prophecie to the world the approaching wonders of his prowesse; so did his fierie looks reflect terror to the weake beholders of his ingrafted nobilitie, as if some God twise born like vnto the Thracian Bacchus, forsaking his heauen borne Deitie, shoulde delude our eyes with the alternate forme of his infancie. Fiuе yeres had full runne their monthly reuolution, when as this beauteous boy began to shew himselfe among the shepheards children, with whom he had no sooner cōtracted familiar acquaintance, but straight he was chosen Lord of the May game, king of their sports, and ringleader of their reuils; insomuch that his tender mother beholding him by chance mountēd in his kingly maiestie, and imitating honorable iustice in his gamesom exercise of discipline, with teares of ioy took vp these propheticall termes; well doo I see, where God and Fate hath vowed felicitie, no aduerse fortune may expel prosperitie. Pleusidippus thou art young, thy lookes high, and thy thoughtes hautie; souereigntie is seated in thy eyes, and honour in thy heart; I feare this fire will haue his flame, and then am I vndone in thee my sonne; my countrey life (sweete countrey life) in thy proud soaring hopes, despoyled and disroabed of the disguised aray of his rest, must returne russet weedes to the foldes where I lēfte my feares, and hast to the court my hell, there to inuest me in my wonted cares. How now Samela, wilt thou be a Sybil of mishap to thy selfe? the angrie heauens that haue eternisht thy exile, haue establisht thy content in Arcadie. My content in Arcadie, that may not be no longer than my Pleusidippus staines in Arcadie, which I haue cause to feare, for the whelps of the Lion are no longer harmlesse than when they are whelpes, and babes no longer to be awed, than while they are babes. I but nature, and therewith she pawsed, being interrupted by a tumult of boies, that by yong Pleusidippus command fell vpon one of their fellowes, and beate him most cruelly for playing false playe at nine holes: which she espying through her lattise window, could not chose but smile aboue measure. But when she saw him in his childish termes condemne one to death for despising the authoritie bequeathed him by the rest of the boyes, then she bethought her of the Persian Cyrus that deposed his Grandfather Astyages, whose vse it was at like age to imitate maiestie in like manner. In this distraction of thoughts she had not long time staid, but Lamedon and Menaphon calde her awaye to accompany them to the foldes, whiles Pleusidippus hasting to the execution of iustice, dismissed his boyish session till their next meeting: where how imperiouslie he behaued himselfe in punishing misorders amongst his equals, in vsing more than iesting iustice towards his vntamed copesmates, I referre it to the Annals of the Arcadians that dilate not a little of this ingenious argument. In this sort did Pleusidippus draw foorth his infancie, till on a time walking to the shore, where hee with his mother were wrackt, to gather cockles and pebble stones, as children are wont: there arriued on the strand a Thessalian Pirate named Eurilachus, who after he had forraged in the Arcadian confines, drijing before him a large bootie of beasts to his ships espied this pretie infant; when gazing on his face as wanton Ioue gazed on Pbrygian Ganimede in the fields of Ida, hee exhaled into his eyes such deepe impression of his perfection, as that his thought neuer thirsted so much after any pray, as this pretie Pleusidippus possession: but determining first to assay him by curtesie before hee assayled him with rigour, he began to trie his wit after this manner. My little childe, whence art thou, where wert thou borne, whats thy name, and wherefore wandrest thou thus all alone on the shoare. I pray ye what are you sir quoth Pleusidippus, that deale thus with me by interrogatories, as if I were some runne away. Wilt thou not tell me then who was thy father? Said he, Good sir, if ye will needes knowe goe aske that of my mother. Hath said wel my Lord quoth Romanio who was one of his especiall associates, for wise are the children in these dayes that know their owne fathers, especially if they be begotten in Dogge daies, when their mothers are franticke with loue, and yong men furious for lust. Besides, who knows not, that these Arcadians are giuen to take the benefit of euerie Hodge, when they will sacrifice their virginitie to Venus, though they haue but a bush of nettles for their bedde; and sure this boy is but some shepheards bastard at the most, howsoeuer his wanton face importeth more than appearence. Pleusidippus eyes at this speach resolued into fire, and his face into purple, with a more than common courage in children of his yeares and stature, gaue him the lie roundly in this replie; Pesant, the bastard in thy face, for I am a Gentleman: wert thou a man in courage, as thou art a Kowe in proportion, thou wouldest neuer haue so much empayred thy honestie, as to derogate from my honor. Look not in my face but leuel at my heart by this that thou seest, and therewith let drive at him with such pebble stones as hee had in his hat, insomuch that Romanio was driuen to his heeles, to shun this sodaine haile shot, and Eurilochus resolued into a laughter, and in tearmes of admiration most highly extolled so exceeding magnanimitie in so little a bodie; which how auailable it prooued to the confirmation of his fancie, that was before inflamed with his features, let them imagine, that haue noted the imbecilitie of that age, and the vnresisted furie of men at armes. Sufficeth at this instant to vnfolde (all other circumstance of praise laid apart) that Eurilochus being farre in loue with his extraordinarie lineaments, awaited no farther parley, but willed his men perforce to hoyse him a shipboord, intending as soone as euer he arriued in Tbessaly, by sending him to the Courte as a present, to make his peace with his Lord and Master Agenor, who not long before had proclaimed him as a notorious Pirate throughout all his dominions. Neither swarued hee one whit from his purpose, for no sooner had he cast anker in the Port of Hadrianopolis, but he arraigned him in choyce silkes and Tyrian purple, and so sent him as a prize to the King of that Country, who walking as then in his summer garden with his Queen the beauteous Eripbila, fell to discourse (as one well seene in Philosophie) of hearbes and flowers, as the fauour or colour did occasion; and hauing spent sometime in disputing their medicinable properties, his Ladie reaching him a Marigold, he began to moralize of it thus merely. I meruaile the Poets that were so prodigall in painting the amorous affection of the Sunne to his Hyacinth, did neuer ob-serue the relation of loue twixt him and the Marigold: it shoulde either seeme they were loath to incurre the displeasure of women, by propounding it in the way of comparison any seruile imitation for head strong wiues, that loue no precepts lesse, than those pertaining vnto duty; or that that flower not so vsual in their gardens as ours; in her vnaquainted name did obscure the honour of her amors to Apollo; to whose motions reducing the methode of her springing, she waketh and sleepeth, openeth and shutteth her golden leaues, as he riseth and setteth. Well did you forestall my exception quoth Eripbila, in terming it a seruile imitation; for were the condition of a wife so slauish as your similitude would inferre, I had as leaue be your page as your spouse, your dogge as your darling. Not so sweete wife answered Agenor, but the comparison holdeth in this, that as the Marigold resembleth the Sunne both in colour and forme, so each mans wife ought euerie way to be the image of her husband, framing her countenance to smile, when she sees him disposed to mirth; and contrariwise her eyes to teares, he being surcharged with melancholy: and as the Marigold displaith the orient ornaments of her beautie to the resplendant viewe of none but her louer Hyperion, so ought not a woman of modestie lay open the allurements of her face to anie but her espoused pheere; in whose absence like the Marigold in the absence of the Sunne, she ought to shut vp her dores, and solemnize continuall night, till her husband her sunne making a happie return, vnsealeth her silence with the ioy of his sight. Beleeue me, but if all flowers (quoth Eripbila) affoord such influence of eloquence to our aduerte orators, Ile exempt them all from my smell, for feare they be all planted to poy-

son. Ofte haue I heard (replied Agenor) our cunning Phisitions conclude, that one poyson is harmelesse to another; which if it be so, there is no cause why a thistle should feare to be stung of a nettle. I can tell you sir, you best were beware, least in wading too farre in comparisons of thistles and nettles, you exchange not your rose for a nettle. If I do quoth Agenor, it is no more, but my gardeners shall plucke it vp by the rootes, and throw it ouer the wal as a weed. To end this iest that els would issue to a iarre, what purple flower is this in forme like a hyacinth (quoth Eriphila) so cunningly dropped with bloud, as if Nature had intermedled with the Heralds arte to emblazon a bleeding heart. It is the flower into the which Poets doo faigne Venus dying Adonis to be turnd, a faire boy but passing infortunate. Was it possible quoth Eriphila, that euer Nature should bee so bounteous to a boy, to giue him a face in despite of women so faire: faine would I see such an obiect, and then would I defie beautie, for imparting our excellencie to any inferiour abiect. In saying these words (as if Fortune meant to present her fancie with his desired felicitie) Romanio conducted by one of the Lords came with yong Pleusidippus in his hand into the priuie garden: where discoursing vnto the king the intent of Eurilochus in presenting him with such an inestimable Iewell, the manner of his taking in the Strond of Ar-cadie, with other circumstance of vowed alleageance; all which being gratefully accepted of Agenor, he sealed their seuerall pardons, and so gaue them leaue to depart. But when he had throughly obserued euerie perfection of yong Pleusidippus, he burst into these tearmes of passion; Had sea-borne Pontia then an appliable eare in our idlenesse, that to testifie hir eternall deitie, she should send vs a second Adonis to delude our senses? What euer may deserue the name of faire haue I seen before, beautie haue I beheld in his brighest orb, but neuer set eye on immortalitie before this houre. Eriphila likewise in no lesse extasie, seeing her eyes to dazzle with the reflexe of his beautie, and hir cheeke tainted with a blush of disgrace by too too much gazing on his face, said; that eyther the Sunne had lefte his bower to beguile their eyes with a borrowed shape (which could not keepe in his brightness) or Cupide dismounted from his mothers lappe, left his bow and quiever at randon, to outbraue the Thessalian dames in their beautie. In this contrarietie of thoughts, being all plunged welnigh in a speachlesse astonishment, the faire childe Pleusidippus not vsed to such hyperbolical spectators, broke off the silence by calling for his victualls, as one whose emptie stomach since his comming from sea, was not ouercloyed with delicates, whereat Agenor reuiued from his trance, wherein the present wonder had inwrapt him, demanded such questions of his name and parentage as the Pirates ignorance could not vnfold; but he being able to tel no more than this, that his mother was a shepheardesse, and his owne name Pleusidippus, cut off all their further interrogatories by calling after his childish manner againe for his dinner. Whereupon Agenor commanding him to be had in, and vsed in euerie respect as the childe of a Prince, began in his solitarie walke by his countenance to calculate his Natiuitie, and measure his birth by his beautie, contracting him in thought heyre to his kingdome of Thessaly, and husbande to his daughter, before he knewe whence the childe descended, or who was his father.

But leauing yong Pleusidippus thus spending his youth in the Thessalian Court, protected with the tender affection of such a courteous Foster-father as Agenor; returne wee where we lefte backe vnto Arcadie, and meeete his Mother the faire Samela returning from the foldes: who hauing discoursed by the way as she came home to Lamedon and Menabon what shee late sawe and obserued in her sonne, they both conioyned their iudgements to this conclusion, that hee was doubtles borne to some greater fortunes than the sheepcoates could containe, and therefore it behouued her to further his Destinies with some good and liberall education, and not to detaine him any longer in that trade of life, which his fortune withstood: but by the way to rebuke him for tyrannising so Lorldlie ouer the boies, least the neighbor shepheards might happely intrude the name of iniurie on them being strangers for his insulting ouer their children. With this determination came she home, and calling for Pleusidippus according to their former counsaile, he would in no wise be found. Thereupon enquirie was made amongst all the shepheards, diligent search in euerie village, but stil the most carefullest post returned with Non est inuentus. Which Samela hearing, thinking she had vtterly lost him whome Fortune had saued, began in this manner to act her vnrest; Dissembling heauens, where is your happinesse? vnconstant times, what are your triumphes? haue you therefore hethertoo fed me with honie, that you might at last poyson me with gall? Haue you fatted mee so long with Sardenian smiles, that like the wracke of the Syrens, I might perrish in your wiles? Curst that I was to affie in your curtesie, curst that am to taste of your cruetie. O Pleusidippus, liuest thou, or art thou dead? No thou art dead, dead to the world, dead to thy kinsfolkes, dead to Cipres, dead to Arcadie, dead to thy mother Samela; and with thee dies the worlds wonder, thy kinsfolkes comfort, Cipres soule, Arcadies hopes, thy mothers honours. Was this the prophecie of thy souereigntie, to yeeld vp thy life to death so vntimely? wretched was I of al women to bring thee foorth to this infancie. O cruel Themis that didst reuolve such vneuitable fate; hard harted death to prosecute me with such hate. Haue wee therefore escapte the furie of the seas, to perish on the land? was it not inough that we were exiled from higher prosperitie, but we must all of vs thus sodainly be ouerwhelmed with the ouerflowe of a second aduersitie? my husband and thy father to be swallowed in the furie of the surge, and now thou to bee (and therewith her eyes distilled such abundance of teares, as stopt the passage of her plaints, and made her seeme a more than second Niobe, bewailing her seauen fold sorrow vnder the forme of a weeping Flint.) Menaphon who had ouer heard her all this while, as one that sought opportunitie to plead his vnrest, perciuing her in that extremitie of agonie for hir sons supposed losse, Stept to hir presently, and cheerde hir vp in these tearmes; Faire shepheardeesse, might the teares of contrition raise the dead from destruction, then were it wisedome to bewaile what weeping might recall; but since such anguish is fruitelesse, and these plainings bootlesse; comfort your self with the hope of the liuing, and omit the teares for the dead. Why quoth Samela how is it possible a woman should loose him without grieve, whom she hath conceiued with sorrow: he was sweete Menaphon, the diuided halfe of my essence, soule to my ioyes, and life to my delights; as beauteous in his birth, as is our bright bow-bearing God, that played the shepheard awhile for loue, amid-dest our pleasant Arcadian Downes. What ere hee was in beautie quoth Menaphon, proceeded from your bountie; who may by marriage make his like when you please: therefore there is no cause you shuld so much grieue to see your first worke defacde, that of a newe molde can forme a farre better than euer he was. Ah Menaphon, nere more may his like proceede from my loynes; I tell thee he made the chamber bright with his beautie when he was born, and chachte the night with the golden rayes that gleamed from his lookes: nere more may I bee the mother of such a sonne. Yes Samela (quoth the frolick shephearde) thinke not but if thou wilt list to my loues, I will enrich thee with as faire increase as euer he was. Alas pore swaine said she, thou hopest in vaine, since another must reap what thou hast sowne, and gather into his barnes what thou hast scattered in the furrowe. Another reap what I haue sownen: therwith he scracht his head where it icht not, and setting his cap he could not tell which way, in a hot fustian fumes he vttred these words of furie; Strumpet of Greece, repaiest thou my loue with this lauish ingratitudo? haue I therefore with my plentie supplied thy wants, that thou with thy pride shouldest procure my wo? did I relieu thee in distresse, to wound me in thy welfare with disdaine? deceitfull woman (and therewith hee swore a holiday oath, by Pan the God of the Shepheards) either returne loue for loue, or I will turne thee forth of doores to scrape vp thy crummes where thou canst; and make thee pitied for thy pouertie, that earst while wert honoured in euerie mans eye through the supportance of thy beautie. Belike then quoth Samela, when you intartained me into your house, you did it not in regarde of the lawes of hospitalitie, but onely with this policie to quench the flames of your fancie: then sir haue I mistooke your honestie, and am lesse indebted to your courtesie. Nay I thought no lesse said Menaphon, when your straggling eye at our last meeting would be gadding throughout euerie corner of our companie, that you would proue such a kinde kistrell; but if you will needes bee starting, Ile serue yee thereafter I warrant you: then see which of our beardlesse yongsters will take ye in, when I haue cast you foorth. Those quoth shee that countenance Menaphon and his pelfe, and are better able than your selfe: but howsoeuer I finde their fauour, I henceforth defie you and your fellowship. And therewith in great rage she flūg away into the next chamber, where her vncle Lamedon layea sleepe; to whome complaining of Menaphons discurtesies, he straight inuented this remedie; there was a shepheard called Moron (brother to Doron) that not long before died of a surfet, whose house and flocke beeing set to sale after his decease, he bought them both foorthwith for Samela with certaine remainder of money he had, and therein enfeast her maugre the furie of Menaphon; who when hee saw she was able to support her state without his purse, became sicke for anger, and spent whole Eclogues in anguish. Sometime lying comfortlesse on his bedde he would complaine him to the windes of his woes, in these or such like woords; Forlorne, and forsooke since Phisicke dooth loathe thee; despaire be thy death, Loue is a God and despiseth thee a man; Fortune blinde, and can not beholde thy dessertes: die, die, fonde Menaphon, that vngratefully hast abandoned thy Mistresse. And therewith stretching himselfe vpon his bedde, as thinking to haue slept, hee was restrained by cares that exiled all rest from his eyes:

whereupon taking his pipe in his hande, twixte playing and singing hee playned him thus.

Menaphons Song in his bedde.

*You restlesse cares companions of the night,
That wrap my ioyes in folds of endlesse woes:
Tyre on my heart, and wound it with your spight,
Since Loue and Fortune proues my equall foes.*

*Farewell my hopes, farewell my happie daies:
Welcome sweete grieve, the subiect of my laies.*

*Mourne beauens, mourne earth, your shepheard is forlorne;
Mourne times and houres since bale inuades my bowre:
Curse euerie tongue the place where I was borne,
Curse euerie thought the life which makes me lowre.*

*Farewell my hopes, farewell my happie daies,
Welcome sweete grieve the subiect of my laies.*

*Was I not free? was I not fancies aime?
Framde not desire my face to front disdaine?
I was; she did: but now one silly maime
Makes me to droope as be whom loue hath slaine.*

*Farewell my hopes, farewell my happie daies,
Welcome sweete grieve the subiect of my layes.*

*Yet drooping, and yet liuing to this death,
I sigh, I sue for pitie at her shrine,
Whose fierie eyes exhale my vitall breath,
And make my flockes with parching beate to pine.*

*Farewell my hopes, farewell my happie daies,
Welcome sweete grieve the subiect of my layes.*

*Fade they, die I, long may she lieue to blisse
 That feedes a wanton fire with fuell of her forme,
 And makes perpetuall summer where shee is;
 Whiles I doo crie oretooke with enuies storne,
 Farewell my hopes, farewell my happie daies:
 Welcome sweete griefe, the subiect of my laies.*

No sooner had Menaphon ended this dittie, but Pesana hearing that he was lately falne sicke, and that Samela and hee were at mortall iarres; thinking now to make hay while the Sunne shinde, and take opportunitie by his forelockes, comming into his chamber vnder pretence to visite him, fell into these tearmes; Why how now Menaphon, hath your newe change driuen you to a night cap? Beleeue me this is the strangest effect of loue that euer I saw, to freeze so quicklye the heart it set on fire so lately. Why maye it not bee a burning feuer as well quoth Menaphon blushing? Nay that can not be said Pesana, since you shake for cold, not swelt for heat. Why if it be so it is long of cold interteinment. Why quoth Pesana, hath your hot intertainment cooled your courage? No, but her vndeserued hate quite hindered my conquest. You knowe quoth Pesana where you might haue been let in long ere this, without either assalt or anie such battrie. With this the shephearde was mute and Pesana ashamed: but at length regathering his spirites to bewray his martyrdome, and make his olde Mistresse some new musicke, he strained foorth this dittie.

*Faire fields proud Floras vaunt, wby is't you smile
 when as I languish?
 You golden meads, wby striue you to beguile
 my weeping anguish?*

I liue to sorrow, you to pleasure spring:
why doo you spring thus?
What will not Boreas tempests wrathfull king
take some pitie on vs?
And send foorth Winter in bir rustie weede,
to waite my bemonings;
Whiles I distrest doo tune my countrey reede
vnto my gronings.
But beauen, and earth, time, place, and euerie power
haue with her conspired
To turne my blisefull sweetes to balefull sower,
since fond I desired
The beauen whereto my thoughts may not aspire:
ay me vnhappie.
It was my fault t'imbrace my bane the fire
that forceth me die.
Mine be the paine, but birs the cruell cause
of this strange torment: Wherfore no time my banning praiers shall pause,
till proud she repent.

Well I perceiue quoth Pesana, for all she hath let you flie like a Hawke that hath lost hir tyre; yet you meane to follow sute and seruice, though you get but a hand-full of smoake to the bargaine. Not so quoth Menaphon, but perhaps I seek to returne an ill bargaine as deare as I bought it. If you doo so, you are wiser than this kercher dooth shew you quoth Pesana. Much idle prattle to this purpose had Menaphō with Pesana in his sick-nesse, and long it was not, but that with good diet and warme broths, (and especially by her carefull attendance) hee began to gather vp his crummes, and listen by litle and litle to the loue he late scorned. Leauue we them to their equall desires, as surfetting either of others societie; and let vs looke back to Thessaly, where Samelaes stripling (now growne vp to the age of sixteene yeres) flourisht in honour and feates of armes aboue all the Knights of the Court, insomuch that the echo of his Fame, was the onely newes talkt on throughout euerie towne in Greece: but Olympia the Mistres of his prowesse, (for so was the Kings daughter named) was she that most of all exaltered in the farre renowmed reports of his martiall perfections, to whose praise hee did consecrate al his indeuours, to whose exquisite forme he did dedicate all his aduentures. But hell-borne Fame, the eldest daughter of Erinnis, enuying the felicitie of these two famous Louers, dismounted eftsoones from hir brasse sounding buildings, and vnburdened hir selfe of hir secrets in the presence of yong Pleusidippus, among whose catalogue she had not forgot to discouer, the incomparable beautie of the Arcadian shepheardesse; whereof the young Prince no sooner had receiued an inckling, but he stood vpon thornes til he had satisfied his desire with her sight. Therefore on a time sitting with his Mistresse at supper, when for table talke it was debated amongst them, what Countrey bredde the most accomplitsh Dames for all thiugs? After straungers and others had deliuered vp their opinions without parcialitie, one amongst them all who had been in Arcadie, gaue vp his verdict thus freely; Gentlewomen (quoth hee) bee it no disgrace for the Moone to stoope to the Sunne, for the starres to giue place when Titan appeares; then I hope neither the Thessalians will be moued, nor the Grecians agriued, if I make Apollos Arcadie beauties Meridian. Neither wil I proceede heerein as our Philosophicall Poets are wont, that muster euerie moouer in the Zodiacke, euerie fixed starre in the firmament, euerie elementall worde of arte in an Almanacke, to prooue that Countrey for beautie most Canonicall where their Mistresse abideth; when as God wot, had they but learned of Appelles, Ne sutor ultra crepidam, they wold not haue aspired aboue their birth, or talkt beyond their sowterly bringing vp. Our Arcadian Nymphs are faire and beautifull, though not begotten of the Suns bright rayes; whose eyes vant loues armorie to the viewe, whose angelical faces are to the obscure earth in steed of a Firmament: viewe but this counterfeite (and therewithall hee shewed the picture of Samela) and see if it be not of force to draw the Sunne from his spheare, or the Moone from hir circle to gaze as the one did on the beautie of Daphne, or al night contemplate as the other on the forme of Endymion, Pleusidippus who al this while heard his tale with attentiuue patience, no sooner beheld the radiant glory of this resplendant face, but as a man alreadie installed in eternitie, he exclaimed thus abruptly, O Arcadie, Arcadie storehouse of Nymphs, and nurserie of beautie. At which words Olympia starting vp suddenly, as if she a second Juno, had taken hir Ioue in bed with Alcmena: and ouercasting the chamber with a frown that was able to mātle the world with an eternall night, she made passage to her choller in these termes of contempt; Beardlesse vpstart of I know not whence, haue the fauours of my bounty (not thy desert) entred thee so deeply in ouerweening presumption, that thou shouldſt be the formost in derogation of our dignitie, and blaspheming of my beautie? I tell thee recreant, I scorne thy clownish Arcady with his inferiour comparissons, as one that prizeth her perfection aboue anie created constitution. Pleusidippns vpon this speach stood plunged in a great perplexitie whether he should excuse himselfe mildly, or take her vp roundly: but the latter being more leuel to his humor thā the former, he begun thus to rowze vp his furie; Disdainful dame that vpbraidest me with my birth as it were base, and my youth as it were boyish, know that although my parents and progenie are enuied by obscuritie, yet the sparkes of renown that make my Eagle minded thoughts to mount, the heauely fire imprisoned in the pannicles of my crest, inciting me to more deeds of honor, than stout Perseus effected with his fauchon in the fields of Hesperia, assertaineth my soule I was the sonne of no coward, but a Gentleman: but since my inequalitie of parentage, is such an eye sore to thy enuie, holde take thy fauors, (and therewith he threw her her gloue) and immortalize whom thou wilt with thy toyes; for I will to Arcadie in despite of thee and thine affinitie, there either to seeke out mischance, or a new Mistres. With this in a great rage he rose from the boord, and would have mounted himselfe to depart in that mood, had not the Lords and gentlemen there present dissuaded him from such an vnaduised enterprise. Neither was this vnkindnesse kept so secret, but it came to the Kings eare as he was new rise from dinner; who for the loue he bare to Pleusidippus whome hee had honoured with Knighthood not long before, and for the toward hopes he saw in him, tooke paines to goe to the chamber where they were; and finding his daughter in straunge manner perplexed with the thought of Pleusidippus departure, her eyes red, and her cheeke all to be blubbered with her iealous teares, he tooke her vp in this manner. Daughter, I thought I had chose such a one to be the obiect of your eie, as you might haue euerie way loued and honoured

as the Lord of your life, and not haue controlled as the slauie of your luste. Did I therefore grace him with my countenance, that you should distaine him with your taunts; peeuiish girle, I aduise thee on my displeasure, either reconcile thy selfe betimes, and reforme thy vnreuerent tearmes, or I will disclaime the loue of a Father, and deale by thee no more as a daughter. Olympia who alreadie had sufficiently bitten on the bridle, took these words more vnkindly than all her former bitterness, which she disgested but sowerly; neuerthelesse making necessitie the present times best pollicie, shee humbled her selfe as shee might with modestie, and desired the best interpretation of what was past: Pleusidippus whose courteous inclination coulde not withstand this submission, in sign of reconcilement gaue her a stoccado des labies: yet was he not so reconciled, but he kept on his purpose of going to Arcadie; whereat Olympia (although she grudged inwardly, yet being loath to offend) helde her peace, and determined to bestowe vpon him a remembrance, whereby he might bee brought to thinke vpon her in his absence; which was the deuise of a bleeding heart floting in the sea, waues curioslie stampyt in golde, with this Motto about it, Portum aut mortem; alluding as it seemed to the deuise in his shield, wherein (because he was taken vp by Eurilochus on the shore) was cunningly drawne in a field argent, the sea waues with Venus sitting on the top, in token that his affection was alreadie fettered. Here holde this said she my sweet Pleusidippus, and hang it about thy neck, that when thou art in Arcadie it may be euer in thine eye; so shall these droppes of ruth that paint out a painfull trueth, withdraw thy fancie from attracting strange beautie: which said, the teares gusht from her eyes, and good Agenors likewise, who gaue him nothing so much in charge, as to make hast of his returne. Pleusidippus although he could haue bin content to haue done the like for companie, yet he had such a minde on his iourney, that he broke off such ceremonies, and hasted a shipboord; and in a Barke bounde for Arcadie, hauing the winde fauourable made a short cut, so that in a daye and nights sayling, he arriuied on the shore adioyning to the Promontorie wher he, his mother, and his vnckle Lamedon were first wrackt.

Leaue we him wandring with some few of his traine that came with him alongst the sea side, to seeke out some town or village where to refresh themselues; and let vs awhile to the Court of Democles where our Historie began: who hauing committed his daughter with her tender babe, her husbande Maximus, and Lamedon his vnckle without oare or mariner to the furie of the merciles waues, determined to leaue the succession of his kingdome to vncertaine chance: for his Queene with Sephestiaes losse (whō she deemed to be dead) tooke such thought, that within short time after she died. Democles as carelesse of all weathers, spent his time Epicure-like in all kinde of pleasures that either art or expence might affoord; so that for his dissolute life he seemed another Heliogabalus, deriuing his securitie from that grounded tranquilitie, which made it prouerbiall to the world, No beauen but Arcadie. Hauing spent manie yeares in this varietie of vanitie, Fame determining to applye her selfe to his fancie, sounded in his eares the singular beautie of his daughter Samela; he, although he were an olde colte, yet had not cast all his wanton teeth, which made him vnder the brute of beeing sicke of a grieuous appoplexie, steale from his Court secretly in the disguise of a shepheard, to come and seek out Samela; who not a little proud of hir new flocke, liude more contented than if she had been Queene of Arcadie; and Melicertus ioying not a little that shee was parted from Menaphon, vsed euerie day to visite her without dread, and courte her in such shepheards tearmes as he had; which howe they pleased her I leaue to you to imagine, when as not long after she vowed mariage to him solemnly in presence of all the shepheards, but not to be solemnized till the Prophecie was fulfilled, mentioned in the beginning of this Historie. Although this penance exceeded the limits of his patience; yet hoping that the Oracle was not vttered in vaine, and might as well (albeit he knew not which way) bee accomplished in him as in any other, was contented to make a vertue of necessitie, and await the vtmost of his destinie. But Pleusidippus, who by this time had perfected his pollicies, exchaunging his garments with one of the heard-groomes of Menaphon, tracing ouer the Plaines in the habit of a Shepheard, chanced to meeete with Democles as he was new come into those quarters; whom mistaking for an olde shepheard, he began many impertinent questions belonging to the Sheepecoates, at last he askt him if he knew Samelas sheepfold; who answering doubtfully vnto all alike, made him halfe angrie: and had not Samela past by at that instant to fill her bottle at a spring neere the foote of the Promontorie, he should lyke inough haue had first hansell of our new Shepheards sheepe-hooke. But the wonder of her beautie so wrought with his wounded fancie, that he thought report a partiall spreader of her praises, and fame too base to talke of such formes. Samela espying this faire shepheard so farre ouer-gone in his gazing, stept to him, and

askt him if he knew her that hee so ouerlookt her. Pardon me faire shepheardesse (quoth Pleusidippus) if it be a fault, for I cannot chuse being Eagle sighted but gaze on the Sunne the first time I see it. And truely I cannot chuse but compare you to one of Æsops Apes, that finding a Gloworme in the night, tooke it for fire; and you seeing a face full of deformities, mistake it for the Sunne. Indeede it maye be mine eyes made opposite to such an obiect may faile in their office, hauing their lights rebated by such brightness. Nay not vnlike quoth Samela, for els out of doubt you would see your way better. Why quoth Pleusidippus I cannot go out of the way, when I meete such glistering Goddesses in my way. How now sir Paris, are you out of your Arithmetiche, I thinke you haue lost your witts with your eyes, that mistake Arcadie for Ida, and a Shepheardesse for a Goddes. How euer it please you (quoth Pleusidippus) to derogate from my prowesse by the title of Paris, know that I am not so farre out of my Arithmetick, but that by Multiplication I can make two of one, in an houres warning, or bee as good as a cypher to fill vp a place at the worst hand; for my wit sufficeth be it neuer so simple to proue both re and voce that there can be no vacuum in rerum natura, and mine eyes (or else they deceiue me) will enter so farre in arte, as niger est contrarius albo, and teach mee how to discerne twixt blacke and white. Much other circumstaunce of prattle passed betweene them, which the Arcadian Records doo not shew, nor I remember; sufficeth he pleaded loue, and was repulst: which droue him into such a cholar, that meeting his supposed shepheard, (who lying vnder a bush, had all this while ouer heard them) he entred into such termes of indignation, as Ioue shaking his earthquaking haire, when he sate in consultation of Licaon. Wherefore Democles perciuing Pleusidippus repulst, who was euery way gracde with the ornaments of Nature, began to cast his bad peniworths, in whose face age had furrowed her wrinckles; except hee should lay his crowne at her feete, and tell her he was King of Arcadia; which in Cōmon wealths respectes, seeming not commodious, he thought to turne a new leafe, and make this yong shepheard the meanes to perfect his purpose. Hee had not farre from that place a strong Castle, which was inhabited as then by none but tilsmen and heardgroomes: thether did he perswade Pleusidippus to carrie her perforce, and effect that by cōstraint, that he could not atchieue by intreatie; who listning not a little to this counsaile, that was neuer platted for his aduantage, presently put in practise what he of late gaue in precepts, and waiting till the euening that Samela should fold hir sheep, hauing giuen his men the watch word, maugre al the shepheards adioyning he mounted her behind him; and being by Democles directed to the Castle, he made such hauocke among the stubborne heardsmen, that wil they nill they, he was Lord of the Castle. Yet might not all this preuaile with Samela, who constant to her olde shephearde, would not interteine anie new loue; which made Pleusidippus thinke all his haruest lost in the reaping, and blemisht al his delights with a mournful drooping. But Democles that lookt for a mountaine of golde in a Mole hill, finding her all alone, began to discourse his loue in more ample mauner thā euer Pleusidippus, telling her how he was a King, what his reuenewes were, what power he had to aduance her; with many other proud vaunts of his wealth, and prodigal termes of his treasure. Samela hearing the name of a King, and perciuing him to be hir Father, stooode amazed like Medusaes Metamorphosis, and blushing oft with intermingled sighes, began to thinke how iniurious fortune was to her shounen in such an incestuous father. But he hot spurred in his purpose, gaue hir no time to deliberate, but required either a quicke consent, or a present deniall. She tolde him, that the Shepheard Meliceretus was alreadie intitled in the interest of hir beautie, wherefore it was in vain what he or anie other could plead in the way of perswasion. He thereupon entring into a large field of the basenesse of Shepheards, and royalties of Kings, with manie other assembled arguments of delight, that would haue fetcht Venus from her sphere to disport: but Samela whose mouth could digest no other meate saue onely hir sweete Meliceretus, ashamed so long to holde parley with her father about such a matter, flung away to her withdrawing chamber in a dissembled rage, and there after her wonted manner bewailed her misfortunes.

Democles plunged thus in a Laborinth of restles passions, seeing Meliceretus figure was so deepeley printed in the center of her thoughts, as neither the resolution of his fancie, his Metamorphosis from a King to a trauler, Crownes, Kingdomes, preferments, (battries that soone ouerthrowe the fortresse of womens fantasies) when Democles I saye, saw that none of these colde remooue Samela; hearing that the Arcadian shepheardees were in a vprore for the losse of their beautiful shepheardesse, his hot loue changing to a bird of coye disdaine; he intended by some reuenge, either to obtaine his loue, or satisfie his hate: whereupon throughly resolued, he stole away secretly in his shepheards appareil, and got him down to the Plaines; where he found all the swains in a mutinie about the recouerie of their beautifull Paragon. Democles stepping amongst the route, demanded the cause of their controuersie. Marie sir quoth Doron bluntly, the flower of all our garland is gone. How meane you that sir, quoth he? We had answered Doron, an Eaw amongst our Ramms, whose fleece was as white as the haires that grow on father Boreas chinne, or as the dangling deawlap of the siluer Bull, her front curled like to the Erimanthian Boare, and spangled like the woosted stockings of Saturne, her face like Mars treading vpon the milke white cloudes: belleeue me shepheard, her eyes were like the fierie torches tilting against the Moone: this paragon, this none such, this Eaw, this Mistres of our flockes, was by a wily Foxe stolne from our foldes; for which these shepheards assemble themselves, to recouer so wealthie a prize. What is he quoth Menaphō that Doron is in such debate with? Fellowe canst thou tell vs anie newes of the faire shepheardesse, that the Knight of Thessaly hath carried away from her fellow Nymphes. Democles thinking to take opportunitie by the forhead: and seeing Time had feathered his bolte, willing to assaye as hee might to hit the marke, began thus.

Shepheardes, you see my profession is your trade, and although my wandring fortunes be not like your home borne fauours; yet were I in the groues of Thessalian Tempe, as I am in the plaines of Arcadie, the swaines would giue mee as manie due honors, as they present you here with submisse reuerence. Beautie that drew Apollo from heauen to playe the shepheard, that fetcht Ioue from heauen to bear the shape of a Bul for Agenors daughter, the excellencye of such a Metaphysicall vertue, I meane shepheard the fame of your faire Samela, houering in the eares of euerie man as a miracle of nature, brought me from Thessaly to feede mine eyes with Arcadies wonder: stepping alongst the shoare to come to some sheepecoate where my wearie limmes might haue rest, Loue that for my labors thought to lead me to fancies paulilion, was my conduct to a castle, where a Thessalian knight lyes in holde, the Portcullis was let downe, the bridge drawen, the Court of garde kept, thether I went; and for by my tongue I was known to be a Thessalian, I was enterteined and lodged: the Knight whose yeares are young, and valure matchlesse, holding in his armes a Ladie more beautifull thā Loues Queene, all blubbered with teares, asked me manie questions, which as I might I replide vnto: but while he talkt, mine eye surfetting with such excellencie, was detained vpon the glorious shew of such a wonderfull obiect; I demanded what she was of the standers by, and they said she was the faire shepheardesse whome the Knight had taken from the swaines of Arcadie, and woulde carrie with the first winde that serued into Thessaly: This shepheards I knowe, and grieue that thus your loues should be ouermatcht with Fortune, and your affections pulde backe by contrarietie of Destinie. Melicertus hearing this, the fire sparkling out of his eyes began thus; I tell thee shephearde, if Fates with their forepointing pencils did pen down, or Fortune with her deepest varietie resolute, or Loue with his greatest power determine to deprive Arcadie of the beautifull Samela, we would with our blood signe downe such spels on the Plaines, that either our Gods should summon her to Elizium, or shee rest with vs quiet and fortunate: thou seest the shepheardes are vp in armes to reuenge, onely it rests who shall haue the honour and principalitie of the field. What needs that questiō quoth Menaphon, am not I the Kings shepheard, and chiefe of all the bordering swaines of Arcadie. I grant quoth Melicertus, but am not I a Gentleman, though tirde in shepheardes skin-coate; superiour to thee in birth, though equall nowe in profession. Well from words they had falne to blowes, had not the shepheards parted them; and for the auoyding of farther troubles, it was agreed that they should in two Eclogs make description of their loue, and Democles, for he was a stranger, to sit Censor, and who best could decipher his Mistres perfection, should be made Generall of the rest. Menaphon and Melicertus condescended to this motion, and Democles sitting as Judge, the rest of the shepheards standing as witnesses of this combat Menaphon began thus.

Menaphons Eclogue.

*Too weake the wit, too slender is the braine
That meanes to marke the power and worth of loue;
Not one that liues (except be hap to proue)
Can tell the sweete, or tell the secret paine.*

*Yet I that haue been prentice to the grieve,
Like to the cunning sea-man from a farre,
By gesse will talke the beautie of that Starre,
Whose influence must yeeld me chiefe reliefe.*

*You Censors of the glorie of my deare,
With reurence and lowlie bent of knee,
Attend and marke what her perfections bee:
For in my words my fancies shall appeare.* .

*Hir lockes are pleighted like the fleece of wooll
That Iason with his Gretian mates atchiude,
As pure as golde, yet not from golde deriude;
As full of sweetes, as sweete of sweetes is full.*

*Her browes are pretie tables of conceate,
Where Loue his records of delight dooth quoate,
On them her dallyng lockes doo daily floate
As Loue full oft dooth feede vpon the baite.*

*Her eyes, faire eyes, like to the purest lights
That animate the Sunne, or cheere the day,
In whom the shining Sun-beames brightly play
Whiles fancie dooth on them diuine delights.*

*Hir cheekes like ripened lillies steept in wine,
Or faire pomegranade kernels washt in milke,
Or snow white threds in nets of crimson silke,
Or gorgeous cloudes upon the Sunnes decline.*

*Her lips are roses ouerwasht with dew,
Or like the purple of Narcissus flower:
No frost their faire, no winde doth wast their power,
But by her breath her beauties doo renew.*

*Hir christall chin like to the purest molde,
Enbac'de with daintie daysies soft and white,
Where fancies faire pavilion once is pight,
Where as imbrac'de his beauties be doth holde.*

*Hir necke like to an yuorie shining tower
Where through with azure veynes sweete Nectar runnes,
Or like the downe of Swannes where Senesse woons,
Or like delight that doth it selfe deuoure.*

*Hir pappes are like faire apples in the prime,
As round as orient pearles, as soft as downe:
They neuer vaile their faire through winters frowne,
But from their sweetes Loue suckt his summer time.*

*Hir bodie beauties best esteemed bowre,
Delicious, comely, daintie, without staine:
The thought whereof (not touch) bath wrought my paine.
Whose faire, all faire and beauties doth deuoure.*

*Hir maiden mount, the dwelling house of pleasure;
Not like, for why no like surpasseth wonder:
O blest is he may bring such beauties vnder,
Or search by sute the secrets ofthat treasure.*

*Deuourd in thought, how wanders my deuice,
What rests behind I must deuine vpon?
Who talkes the best, can say but fairer none:
Few words well coucht doo most content the wise.*

*All you that beare; let not my sillie stile
Condemne my zeale: for what my tongue should say Serues to inforce my thoughts to seeke the way
Wherby my woes and cares I doo beguile.*

*Selde speaketh Loue, but sighs his secret paines;
Teares are his truce-men, words doo make him tremble.
How sweete is loue to them that can dissemble
In thoughts and lookes, till they haue reapt the gaines,*

*Alonely I am plaine, and what I say
I thinke, yet what I thinke tongue cannot tell:
Sweete Censors take my silly worst for well:
My faith is firme, though homely be my laye. -*

After the haples Menaphon had in this homely discourse shadowed his heauenly delight; the shepheard Melicertus after some pause began in this sort.

Melicertus Eclogue.

*What neede compare where sweete exceedes compare?
Who drawes his thoughts of loue from senselesse thngs,
Their pompe and greatest glories doth impaire,
And mounts Loues heauen with ouer leaden wings.*

*Stones, bearbes and flowers, the foolish spoyles of earth,
Flouds, mettals, colours, dalliance of the eye:
These shew conceipt is staind with too much dearth:
Such abstract fond compares make cunning die.*

*But he that bath the feeling taste of Loue Deriuers his essence from no earthlie toy;
A weake conceipt his power cannot approue,
For earthly thoughts are subiect to annoy.*

*Be wblis, be still, be silent Censers now;
My fellow swaine has tolde a pretie tale
Whicb moderne Poets may perhaps allow,
Yet I condemne the tearmes; for they are stale.*

*Apollo when my Mistres first was borne Cut off his lockes, and left them on bir bead,
And said; I plant these wires in Natures scorne, Whose beauties shall appeare when Time is dead.*

*From foorth the Christall heauen when she was made,
The puritie thereof did taint bir brow:
On whicb the glistering Sunne that sought the shad
Gan set, and there his glories doth auow.*

*Those eyes, faire eyes, too faire to be describde,
Were those that earst the Chaos did reforme:
To whom the beauen their beauties haue ascribde,
That fashion life in man, in beast, in worme.*

*When first bir faire delicious cheekes were wrought,
Aurora brought bir blush, the Moone bir white:
Both so combine as passed Natures thought,
Compilde those pretie orbes of sweete delight.*

*When Loue and Nature once were proud with play,
From both their lips bir lips the Corall drew:
On them doth fancy sleepe, and euerie day
Doth swallow ioy such sweete delights to view.*

*Whilome while Venus Sonne did seeke a bowre
To sport with Psiches his desired deare,
He chose her chinne; and from that happie stowre
He neuer stints in glorie to appeare.*

*Desires and Ioyes that long had serued Loue, Besought a Holde where pretie eyes might woo them:
Loue made her necke, and for their best beboue
Hath shut them there, whence no man can vndoo them.*

*Once Venus dreamt upon two pretie things,
Hir thoughts they were affections chiefest neasts:
She suckt and sightbt, and bathde bir in the springs,
And when she wakt they were my Mistres breasts.*

*Once Cupide sought a holde to couch his kisses,
And found the bodie of my best beloude.
Wherin be cloxde the beautie of his blisses,
And from that bower can neuer be remoude. .*

*The Graces earst, when Alcidelian springs
Were waxen drie, perhaps did finde bir fountaine
Within the vale of blisse, where Cupides wings
Doo shild the Nectar fleeting from the mountaine.*

*No more fond man: things infinite I see Brooke no dimension: Hell a foolish speech;
For endles things may neuer talked be.
Then let me liue to honor and beseech.*

*Sweete Natures pompe, if my deficient pbraze Hath staind thy glories by too little skill,
Yeeld pardon though mine eye that long did gaze,
Hath left no better pattern to my quill.*

*I will no more, no more will I detaine
Your listning eares with dallyance of my tongue:
I speake my ioyes, but yet conceale my paine;
My paine too olde, although my yeers be yong.*

As soone as Melicertus had ended this Eclogue, they expected the doome of Democles, who hearing the sweete description, wherein Melicertus described his Mistres, wondered that such rare conceipts could bee harbourd vnder a shepheards gray cloathing, at last he made this aunswere.

*Arcadian Swaines, whose wealth is content, whose labours are tempred with sweete loues, whose mindes aspyre not, whose thoughts brooke no enuie; onely as riualls in affection, you are friendly emulators in honest fancie: sith fortune (as enemie to your quiet) hath reft you of your fayre shepheardesse, (the worlds wonder, and Arcadies miracle) and one of you as champion must* lead the rest to reuenge, both desirous to shew your valour as your forwardnesse in affections, and yet (as I said) one to be sole chieftaine of the traine, I award to Melicertus that honor (as to him that hath most curiously portrayed out his Mistres excellencie) to beare the sole rule and supremacie. At this Menaphon grudged, and Melicertus was in an extasie for ioy; so that gathering all his forces together of stout headstrong clownes, amounting to the number of some two hundred, he apparailed himselfe in armour, colour sables, as mourning for his Mistres, in his shield he had figured the waues of the sea, Venus sitting on them in the height of all her pride. Thus marched Melicertus forward with olde Democles the supposed shepheard till they came to the castle, where Pleusidippus and his faire Samela were resident. As soone as they came there, Melicertus begirt the Castle with such a siege, as so manie sheepish Caualiuers could furnish: which when he had done, summoning them in the Castle to parley, the yong Knight stept vpon the walls, and seeing such a crue of base companions, with Iackets and rustie bills on their backs, fell into a great laughter, and began to taunt them thus.

Why, what straunge Metamorphosis is this? Are the Plaines of Arcadie, whilome filled with labourers, now ouerlaide with launces? Are sheepe transformed into men, swaines into souldiers, and a wandring companie of poore shepheards, into a worthie troope of resolute champions? No doubt, either Pan meanes to playe the God of warre, or else these be but such men as rose of the teeth of Cadmus. Nowe I see the beginning of your warres, and the pretended ende of your stratagems: the shepheards haue a madding humor like the Greekes to seek for the recouerie of Helena; so you for the regaining of your faire Samela. Heere she is Shepheards, and I a Priam to defende hir with resistance of a ten yeares siege; yet for I were loath to haue my Castle sackte like Troy, I pray you tell me which is Agamemnon?

Melicertus hearing the youth speake thus proudly, hauing the sparkes of honor fresh vnder the cinders of pouertie, incited with loue and valor (two things to animate the most dastard Thersites to enter combate against Hercules) answered thus.

Vnknownen yongster of Thessaly, if the feare of thy hardie deedes, were like the Diapason of thy threatnes, wee woulde thinke the Castle of longer siege, than either our ages would permit, or our valour aduenture: but where the shelfe is most shallowe, there the water breakes most high; emptie vessels haue the highest sounds, hollowe rockes the loudest echoes, and pratling gloriosers, the smallest performaunce of courage; for prooфе whereof, seeing thou hast made a rape of faire Samela, one of her vowed Shepheards is come for the safetie of hir sweete selfe to challenge thee to single combat; if thou ouercome me, thou shalt freelie passe with the shepheardesse to Thessaly; if I vanquish thee, thou shalt feele the burthen of thy rashnesse, and Samela the sweetnesse of her libertie. Pleusidippus meruailed at the resolution of the shepheard; but when Democles heard how if hee wonne, she should be transported into Thessaly, a world of sorowes tombled in his discontented braine, that he hammered in his head many meanes to stay the faire Samela; for when Pleusidippus in a great choller was readie to throwe downe his gantlet, and to accept of the combat, Democles stepped vp and spoke thus: Worthie mirrors of resolued magnanimitie, whose thoughts are aboue your fortunes, and whose valour more than your reuenewes, knowe that Bitches that puppie in hast bring foorth blind whelpes; that there is no herbe sooner spong vp than the Spattarmia, nor sooner fadeth; that fruits too soone ripe are quickly rotten; that deedes done in hast are repented at leisure: then braue men, in so weightie a cause, and for the conquest of so excellent a Paragon, let not one minute begin and end the quarrell, but like Fabius of Rome vse delay in such dangerous exploytes, when honor sits on wreaths of Lawrell to giue the victor his garland: deferre it some three daies, and then in solemne manner end the combat. To this good motion not onely Pleusidippus and Melicerthus agreed, but all the companie were consenting, and vpon pledges of truce being giuen, they rested. But Democles seeing in couerte he could not conquer, and that in despairing loues, secrecie was no salue, he dispatched letters to the Nobilitie of his court, with straight charge that they should bee in that place within three dayes with tenne thousand strong. This newes no sooner came to the Generall of his Forces, but leuying so many approoued souldiers, he marched secretly by night to the place Democles in his letters had prescribed; and there ioyfully interteined by the King, they were placde in ambush readie when the signall should be giuen to issue out of the place, and performe their Souereignes command. Well, the third day being come, no sooner did Titan arise from the watrie Couche of his Lemman, but these two champions were readie in the listes, accompanied with the route of all the Arcadian shepheards, and olde Democles whom they had appoynted for one of the Judges. Pleusidippus seeing Melicerthus aduaçe on his shield the waues of the sea with a Venus sitting vpon them, meruailed what the shepheard should be that gaue his armes, and Melicertus was as much amazed to see a strange Thessalian Knight vant his armes without difference; yet being so fraught with direfull reuenge, as they scorned to salute each other so much as with threates, they fell toughly to blowes. Samela standing on top of the turret, and viewing the combate; the poore Ladie grieuing that for her cause such a stratageme should arise in Arcadie, her countenance ful of sorrow, and flouds of teares falling from her eyes, she began to breath out this passion.

Vnfortunate Samela born to mishaps, and forepointed to sinister fortunes, whose bloomes were ripened by mischance, and whose fruite is like to wither with despaire; in thy youth sate discontent pruning her selfe on thy forhead, now in thine age sorrow hides her selfe amongst the wrinkles of thy face: thus art thou infortunate in thy Prime, and crossed with cōtrarie accidents in thy Autumne; as haplesse as Helena to haue the burden of warres laid on the wings of thy beautie. And who must be the champion? whose sword must pearce the helme of thine enemie? whose bloud must purchase the freedome of Samela, but Melicertus? If he conquer, then Samela triumphs, as if she had been chiefe victor in the Olympiades; if he loose, euerie drop falling from his wounds into the center of my thoughts, as his death to him, so shall it be to me the ende of my loues, my life, and my libertie. As still shee was about to goe forwarde in hir passion, the trumpet sounded and they fell to fight in such furious sorte, as the Arcadians and Democles himselfe wondered to see the courage of the Shepheard, that tied the Knight to such a sore taske. Pleusidippus likewise feeling an extraordinarie kinde of force, and seeing with what courage the Knight of the shepheards fought, beganne to conjecture diuersly of the waues, and to feare the euent of the combate. On the contrarie parte, Melicertus halfe wearied with the heauie blowes of Pleusidippus, stoode in a maze howe so yong a wagge should be so expert in his weapon. Thus debating diuersly in their seueral thoughts, at length being both wearie, they stepte backe, and leaning on their swordes tooke breath, gazing each vpon other. At last Pleusidippus burst into these speaches.

Shepheard in life, though now a Gentleman in armour, if thy degree be better, I glorie I am not disgracde with the combate: tell me, how darest thou so farre wrong mee, as to weare mine Armes vpon thy shield?

Princockes (quoth Melicertus) thou liest, they bee mine owne, and thou contrarie to the Lawe of Armes bearest my Creast without difference, in which quarrell, seeing it concernes mine honour, I will reuenge it as farre as my loues; and with that he gaue such a charging blowe at Pleusidippus healme, that hee had almost ouerturned him: Pleusidippus lefte not the blowe vnrequited, but doubled his force; insomuch that the hazard of the battaile was doubtfull, and both of them were faine to take breath againe. Democles seeing his time, that both of them were sore weakened, gaue the watchword, and the ambush leapt out, slaughtered manie of the shepheards, put the rest to flight, tooke the two champions prisoners, and sacking the Castle, carried them and the faire Samela to his Court: letting the Shepheardesse haue her libertie, but putting Melicertus and Pleusidippus into a deepe and darke dungeon.

Where leauing these passionate Louers in this Cata- strophe, againe to Doron the homely blunt Shephearde; who hauing been long enamoured of Carmela, much good wooing past betwixte them, and yet little speeding; at last, both of them met hard by the Promontorie of Arcadie, shee leading foorth her Sheepe, and hee going to see his newe yeand Lambes. As soone as they met, breaking a few quarter blowes with such countrey glaunces as they coulde, they geerde one at another louingly. At last Doron manfully begun thus.

Carmela by my troth God morrow, tis as daintie to see you abroad, as to eate a messe of sweete milke in July: you are proude such a house doue of late, or rather so good a Huswife, that no man may see you vnder a couple of Capons; the Church-yeard may stand long inough ere you will come to looke on it, and the Piper may begge for euerie pennie he gets out of your pursse: but it is no matter, you are in loue with some stout Ruffler, and yet poore folkes, such a I am, must be content with porridge: and with that, turning his backe, he smiled in his sleeve to see howe kindly hee had giuen her the bobbe: which Carmela seeing, she thought to be euen with him thus.

Indeede Doron you saye well, it is long since wee met, and our house is a Grange house with you: but we haue tyed vp the great Dogge, and when you come you shall haue greene rushes you are such a straunger: but tis no matter; soone hot soone colde, hee that mingles himselfe with drasse, the hogges will eate him: and she that layes her loue on an vnkinde man, shall finde sorrowe inough to eate hir soppes withall. And with that Carmela was so full stomackt that she wept.

Doron to shewe himselfe a naturall young man, gaue her a few kinde kisses to comfort her, and sware that she was the woman he loued best in the whole worlde, and for proofe quoth he, thou shalt heare what I will praise: and you quoth she, what I will performe. And so taking hand in hand, they kindly sate them downe, and began to discourse their loues in these Eclogues.

Dorons Eclogue ioynd with Carmelas.

*Sit downe Carmela here are cubbs for kings,
Slowes blacke as ieat, or like my Christmas shooes, Sweete Sidar which my leathren bottle brings:
Sit downe Carmela let me kisse thy toes.*

Carmela.

*Ab Doron, ab my heart, thou art as white,
As is my mothers Calfe or brinded Cow,
Thine eyes are like the slow wormes in the nights,
Thine baires resemble thickest of the snow.*

*The lines within thy face are deepe and cleere
Like to the furrowes of my fathers waine,
Thy sweate upon thy face dooth oft appeare
Like to my mothers fat and Kitchin gaine.*

*Ab leaue my toe and kisse my lippes my loue,
My lippes and thine, for I haue giuen it thee:
Within thy cap tis thou shalt weare my gloue,
At foote ball sport thou shalt my champion be..*

Doron.

*Carmela deare, euен as the golden ball
That Venus got, such are thy goodly eyes,
When cherries iuice is iumbled therewithall,
Tby breath is like the steeme of apple pies.*

*Tby lippes resemble two Cowcumbers faire,
Tby teeth like to the tuskes of fattest swine,
Tby speach is like the thunder in the aire:
Would God thy toes, thy lips and all were mine.*

Carmela.

Doron what thing dooth mooue this wishing grieve.

Doron.

*Tis Loue Carmela ab tis cruell Loue.
That like a slauе, and caitiffe villaine thiefe,
Hath cut my ithroate of ioy for thy beþoue.*

Carmela.

Where was he borne?

Doron.

*In faith I know not where.
But I haue had much talking of his dart.
Ay me poore man, with manie a trampling teare,
I feele him wound the forebearse of my heart,
What doo I loue? O no, I doo but talke.
What shall I die for loue? O no, not so.
What am I dead? O no my tongue dooth walke.
Come kisse Carmela, and confound my woe.*

Carmela.

*Euen with this kisse, as once my father did,
I seale the sweete indentures of delight:
Before I breake my vowe the Gods forbid,
No not by day, nor yet by darkesome night.*

Doron.

*Euen with this garland made of Holly-hocks
I crosse thy browes from euerie shepheards kisse.
Heigh boe how glad am I to touch thy lockes,
My frolicke heart euen now a free man is,*

Carmela.

*I thanke you Doron, and will thinke on you,
I loue you Doron, and will winke on you.
I seale your charter patten with my thummes,
Come kisse and part for feare my mother comes.*

Thus ended this merrie Eclogue betwixte Doron and Carmela: which Gentlemen if it be stufft with pretie Similes and farre fetcht Metaphores; thinke the poore Countrey Louers knewe no further comparisons, than came within compasse of their Countrey Logicke. Well, twas a good worlde when such simplicitie was vsed, sayes the olde women of our time, when a ring of a rush woulde tye as much Loue together as a Gimmon of golde: but Gentlemen since wee haue talkte of Loue so long, you shall giue me leaue to shewe my opinion of that foolish fancie thus.

Sonetto.

*What thing is Loue? It is a power diuine
 That raines in vs: or else a wreakefull law
 That doomes our mindes to beautie to encline:
 It is a Starre whose influence dooth draw
 Our hearts to Loue dissembling of his might,
 Till he be master of our hearts and sight.*

*Loue is a discord and a strange diuorce
 Betwixt our sense and reason, by whose power
 As madde with reason we admit that force,
 Which wit or labour, neuer may deuoure,
 It is a will that brooketh no consent:
 It would refuse, yet neuer may repent.*

*Loue's a desire, which for to waite a time,
 Dooth loose an age of yeeres, and so doth passe
 As dooth the shadow seuerd from his prime,
 Seeming as though it were, yet neuer was.*

*Leauing behinde nought but repentant thoughts
 Of daies ill spent, for that which profits noughts.
 Its now a peace, and then a sodaine warre,
 A bope consumde before it is conceiude,
 At band it feares, and menacetb a farre,
 And he that gaines is most of all deceiude:
 It is a secret bidden and not knowne,
 Which one may better feele than write vpon.*

Thus Gentlemen haue you heard my verdite in this Sonetto, now will I returne to Doron and Carmela, who not seeing her mother come, fell againe to a few homely kisses, and thus it was.

After they had thus amorously ended their Eclogues, they plighted faith and troth; and Carmela verie brisklye wiping her mouth with a white apron sealed it with a kisse, which Doron taking merueilous kindly, after a little playing loath to depart, they both went about their businesse. Leauing them therefore to their businesse, again to Democles; who seeing no intreaties would serue to perswade Samela to loue, neither the hope of the Arcadian Crowne, nor the title of a Queene, lastly assayed with frownes and threates, but all in vaine: for Samela first restrained by nature in that he was her Father, and secondly by loue in that Melicertus lay imprisoned onely for her sake, stooode still so stiffe to her tackling, that Democles chaunging loue into hate, resolued to reuenge that with death, which no meanes els might satisfie: so that to colour his frauds withall, he gaue Samela free license to visite Melicertus: which she had not long done, but that by the instigation of the old King, the gailor confederate to his treacherie, accuseth her of adulterie: wherevpon without further witnesse they both were condemned to dye. These two louers knowing themselues guiltlesse in this surmised faction, were ioyfull to ende their loues with their liues, and so to conclude all in a fatall and finall content of mindes and passions. But Democles set free Pleusidippus, as afraide the King of Thessaly would reuenge the wrong of his Knight, intertwining him with sumptuous banquets, as beffited so braue and worthie a Gentleman. The day came prefixed wherein these parties should die; Samela was so desirous to end her life with her friend, that she would not reueale either vnto Democles or Melicertus what she was; and Melicertus rather chose to die with his Samela, than once to name himself Maximus. Both thus resolued, were brought to the place of execution; and Pleusidippus sitting on a scaffolde with

Democles, seeing Samela come forth like the blush of the morning, felt an vncouth passion in his mind, and nature began to enter combate with his thoughtes; not loue but reuerence, not fancie but feare began to assaile him, that he turnd to the King, and sayd: Is it not pitie Democles, such diuine beautie should be wrapt in cinders: No quoth Democles, where the anger of a King must be satisfied. At this answere Pleusidippus wrapt his face in his cloake and wept, and all the assistants grieued to see so faire a creature subiect to the violent rage of fortune. Well Democles commaunded the deathsman to doo his deuoyre; who kneeling downe and craung pardon, readie to giue Melicertus the fatall stroake, there stopt out an olde woman attired like a Prophetesse, who cried out; Villaine hold thy hand, thou wrongest the daughter of a King. Democles hearing the outcrie, and seeing that at that word the people begun to mutinie and murmur, demanded the olde woman what she meant? Now quoth she, Democles is the Delphian oracle performed; Neptune hath yeelded vp the worlds wonder, and that is young Pleusidippus nephew to thee, and sonne to faire Sephestia, who heere standeth vnder the name of Samela, cast vpon the Promontorie of Arcadie with her yong sonne, where shee as a shepheardesse hath liude in labours tempred with loues; her son playing on the shore, was conveyed by certaine Pirates into Thessaly, where (when as he was supposed euerie waye to be dead) doing deedes of chualrie, he fulfilled the prophecie: your highnesse giuing the Lyon, were guid vnto the lambs in dissembling your selfe a shepheard: planets resting vpon the hills, was the picture of Venus vpon their crests: and the seas that had neither ebbe nor tide, was the combate twixte the father and the sonne, that gaue the waues of the seas in their shields, not able to vanquish one another, but parting with equall victorie. For know Democles this Melicertus is Maximius, twice betrothed to Sephestia, and Father to yong Pleusidippus: nowe therefore the Oracle fulfilled, is the happie time wherein Arcadie shal rest in peace. At this, the people gaue a great shout, and the olde woman vanisht. Democles as a man rauisht with an extasie of sodaine ioye, sate still, and stared on the face of Sephestia: Pleusidippus in all dutie leapt from his seate, and went and couered his mother with his roabe, crauing pardon for the fondnesse of his incestuous affection: and kneeling at his fathers feete submisse in that he had drawen his sword, and sought his life that first in this world gaue him life. Maximius first looked on his wife, and seeing by the lineaments of her face that it was Sephestia, fell about her necke, and both of them weeping in the bosome of their sonne shed teares for ioye to see him so braue a Gentleman. Democles all this while sitting in a trance, at last calling his senses together, seeing his daughter reuiued, whom so cruelly for the loue of Maximius he had banisht out his confines, Maximius in safetie, and the childe a matchles paragon of approued chualrie, he leapt from his seate, and imbraced them all with teares, crauing pardon of Maximius and Sephestia: and to shew that the outward obiect of his watrie eies, had a sympathie with the inward passion of his hart, he impald the head of his yong neuew Pleusidippus with the crowne and diadem of Arcadie: and for that his brother Lamedon had in all distresse not lefte his daughter Sephestia, he toke the matter so kindly, that he reconciled himselfe vnto him, and made him Duke in Arcady. The successe of this forere-hearsed Catastrophe growing so comicall, they all concluded after the Festiuell solemnizing of the Coronation (which was made famous with the excellent deeds of manie worthie Caualiers) to passe into Thessaly, to contract the mariage twixt Pleusidippus, and the daughter of the Thessalian King. Which newes spred thorough Arcadie as a wonder, that at last it came to Menaphons eares; who hearing the high parentage of his supposed Samela, seeing his passions were too aspiring, and that with the Syrian wolues he barkt against the Moone, he lefte such lettice as were too fine for his lips, and courted his old loue Pesana, to whom shortly after he was married. And lest there should be left any thing vnperfect in this pastorall accident, Doron smudgde himselfe vp, and iumpde a marriage with his old friend Carmela.

FINIS.

A Margarite of America

---

By T. Lodge

---

Printed for John Busbie, and are to be sold in S. Dunstons church-yard in Fleet-street, at the little shop
next Cliffords Inne.
1595

To the noble, learned and vertuous Ladie, the Ladie Russell, T.L. wisheth affluence on earth, and felicitie in heauen.

ΜΑДАМ, your deep and considerate iudgement your admired honor and happy readings haue drawne me to present this labor of mine to your gracious hands, and fauorable patronage: wherein, though you shall find nothing to admire; yet doubt I not but you may meet many things that deserue cherishing.
Touching the subiect, though of it selfe it seeme historicall yet if it please you like our English Sapbo, to look into that which I haue slenderly written, I doubt not but that your memory shal acquaint you with my diligence, and my diligence may deserue your applause.
Touching the place where I wrote this, it was in those straits christned by Magelan; in which place to the southward many wonderous Isles, many strange fishes, many monstrous Patagōnes withdrew my senses; briefly,
many bitter and extreme frosts at midsummer continually clothe and clad the uncomfortable mountaines;
so that as there was great wonder in the place wherein I writ this, so likewise might it be maruelled, that in such scantie fare, such causes of feare, so mightie discourgements, and many crosses, I should deserue or eternize anything. Yet what I haue done (good Madame) iudge and hope this felicitie from my pen, that whilst the memorie thereof shal liue in any age, your charitie, learning, nobilitie and vertues shall be eternized. Oppian writing to Theodosius was as famous by the person to whome hee consecrated his study, as fortunate in his labours, which as yet are not mastered by obliuion; so hope I (Madame) on the wing of your sacred name to be borne to the temple of Eternitie, where though enuie barke at me the Muses shall cherish, loue, and happie me. Thus hoping your Ladiship will supply my boldnesse with your bountie and affabilitie, I humbly kisse your most delicate handes, shutting vp my English duety vnder an Italian copie of humanitie and curtesie. From my house this 4. of Maie 1596.

Your Honors in all zeale,
T. L O D G E.

¶ To the Gentlemen Readers.

GENTLEMEN, I am preuented in mine own hopes; in secondeing thrifts forward desires. Som foure yeres since being at sea with M. Candish (whose memorie if I repent not, I lament not) it was my chance in the librarie of the Iesuits in Sanctum to find this historie in the Spanish tong, which as I read delighted me, and delighting me, wonne me, and winning me, made me write it. The place where I began my worke, was a ship, where many souldiers of good reckning finding disturbed stomackes; it can not but stand with your discretions to pardon an vndiscreete and vnstaied penne, for hands may vary where stomacks miscary. The time I wrote in, was when I had rather will to get my dinner, then to win my fame. The order I wrote in, was past order, where I rather obserued mens hāds lest they should strike me, then curious reason of men to condemne mee. In a worde, I wrote vnder hope rather the fish should eate both me writing, and my paper written, then fame should know me, hope should acquaint her with me, or any but miserie should heare mine ending. For those faults (gentlemen) escaped by the Printer, in not being acquainted with my hand, and the booke printed in my absence, I must craue you with fauour to iudge of, and with your wonted curtesies to correct; and according to Ecclesiastcall law, giue vs on our confession absolution: if you will not, remember this, that a countrie lasse for Ladies, may tell them they curle too much; and for Gentlemen, that they are vnfashioned by their fashions. To be short, who liues in this world, let him wincke in the world; for either men prooue too blinde in seeing too litle, or too presumptuous in condemning that they shoulde not.

Yours T. Lodge.

---

A Margarite of America

For Ladies Delight, and Ladies Honour

---

THE blushing morning gan no sooner appeare from the desired bed of her old paramor, and remembryng hir of hir Cephalus, watered the bosome of sweete floures with the christal of hir teares: but both the armes (awaked by the harmonie of the birds, that recorded their melody in euery bush, began to arme them in their tents, and speedily visit their trenches: Among the rest the two emperors (the one, Protomachus of Mosco, the other, Artosogon of Cusco) considering with themselves, the care Princes ought to haue that commaund multitudes; the prefixed houre of their fight alreadie arriued, sodainely armed themselues, commanding their corronels by sound of trumpet to draw out their companies into the plain: Then marched forth ech squadron, deafing the aire with their cries, dimming the sunne with the reflexion of their costly curets, their high lookes promised happy forwardnes, and their haughtie hearts were portraied in their dreadlesse demeane. At the last embattailed in due order, the pikemen in a Macedonian phalanx, the horsemen in their out-wings, the shot as gards to the pikes, al as protectors of their colours, the fatall charge was sounded, and both the armes marched forward to encounter: (when sodainly an old man, whose sober lookes betokened his seuere thoughts, whose morneful garments, shadowed, his melancholie minde,) bearing the Image of the Gods, (whom he most honoured) betweene his armes, and the homage a true subiect ought to haue in his heart, thrust himselfe betweene both the armies, when sending many sighes from his breast to famous pittie, and teares from his eies to moue compassion, he fixed both his hands on their knees (who were neerely encountered to enter combate) and began in their termes to perswade both the monarchs (whilst both the armies withdrew their weapons, to giue diligent attention to his words:) Stay your vnbridled furies, O you Princes, and let not the world say, that you who were borne to be the defenders of the monarchies, are (through your il-gouerned furies) become the destroyers of mankinde. Whereto tendeth this your vniust armes? if for your priuate grudges; oh how fond are you, that to reuenge your mislikes, are the murtherers of many innocents? If to enlarge your signiories; oh how vaine are you, that seek to attaine that with bloud, which you must keepe with care; that labor to sell that with stripes, which you haue bought with peace; that trauel to loose your own estates and signiories, for alitle name of souerainty? Heare me O you Princes (nay rather be aduised by me:) you haue spent huge treasures, made many widdowes, lost three yeares, and for what I pray you? for the right of one citie, the whole confines and reuenewes whereof is not sufficient to acquit for one moneth of your charges: O vnhappy Mantinea, the cause of such hartburning: O lawles name of seigniory, the occasion of such sorrows. Heare what Plutarch saith, Ye potentates, there is no warre that taketh head amongst men, but of vice: for either the loue of pleasure, either couetousnes, ambition or desire of rule, prouoketh the same. If this be true, as it is most certaine, why blush you not (Princes) to behold your owne follies? why reconcile you not to amend your misdeedes? If you say there are more pleasures in Man-tinea, then in your seueral countries, you detract from whole prouinces, to make proud one poore cittie: and if it were, what a vaine thing is it, that such as are in authority should purchase a priuate delight by publike danger? Plato being demanded why he praised the Lydians so much, and dispraised the Lacedemonians so highly, answered thus: If I commend the Lydians, it is for that they were neuer occupied but in tilling the field: and if I do reprove the Lacedemonians, it is because they knew nothing else but to conquer Realmes: so vertuous a thing hath it bin held by the learned to maintaine peace, and to shunne occasions of contention. If you will be held vertuous and monarchies (as I wish you should be) desire nothing to the damage of your common weales, lest in satisfying your owne humors ye subuert your subiects happines. If for couetousnes ye hunt after conquests, how vaine are you, labouring like mad men to lay more straw on your houses to burn them, and cast more water on the sea to drowne it? Couetousnes is an affection that hath no end, an extreame that hath no meane, a profit full of preiudice. Wel said Aristotle in his Politikes, there is no extreme pouertie but that of couetousnes. If for ambitiō, wel may ye weep with Alexander, to be laughed at, practise with Zenos, to repent with him: for in desiring beyond your reach, you fall besides your hopes. But if all these euills be growen to one head, if your incontinencie in desire, your excessiue thirst after pleasure, your couetous longing after riches, your ambitious hunting after seignioritie, haue occasioned this warre; subdue these errors in your selues for your subiects sakes: and sith Protomachus hath one daughter, and no more to inherit

Mosco, and Artosogon one sonne and heire to sucede in the Empire of Cusco, let both these be ioyned together in happie matrimonie: so shall the cause of this different be quicklie decided, your selfe may roote out your ingrafted errors, your subiects enjoy their desired peace, and finally, your Children shal haue greater cause to praise their fathers foresight, then to repent hereafter their vniust furie. Hereunto I coniure you, O you Princes, by these holy gods, whom you honour, by these hoarie haires which you should reuerence, lest your subiects hereafter ruined through your rashnes, haue rather occasion to curse you then commend you. In Olauius Cesars time, each one thought himselfe fortunate to be borne vnder his emperie, and him happie that maintained his prouince in peace: so let it be said of you (good Princes) and leave you such memorie to your succession: then shall I thinke my selfe happie in my perswasions, and you shall be famous to all posteritie.

No sooner had he ended his oration, but both the emperors resolued, by his reasons, and pacified by the perswasions of their nobilitie (who after long debate and consultation, and cheare behouefull) drew to an accord: wherein it was concluded, that Arsadachus the youthful heire of Cusco shoulde bee sent to the emperor of Mosco, where, (considering the worthines of his court) he shuld find fit companions, and apply himself to fancie, being continually in the presence of his faire Margarita: finally (after the decease of both the Princes) it was enacted that both Mantinea and the whole empire, should remaine to Arsadachus, and Margarita and their heires for euer. These articles thus concluded vpon, both the campes brake up; the braue knights who tofore time delighted in tossing of lances, now haue no other pleasure but in talking with faire Ladies, the souldiers sword, was changed to a husbandmans sithe; his gay Curets, to a grey frocke; the gates which before-time were shut against foes, were now opened to all sorts as vnsuspected friends: Such libertie followeth peace, exempted from the tyranny of warre. Artosogon withdrew his folowers to his owne frontires, and returning to his court, made honourable prouision for his sonne Arsadachus to send him to Moscouia. Protomachus (after he had rewarded each souldier according to his desert) withdrew himselfe to the castel of that aged father, who had so faithfully councelled him, (yeelding him for rewarde the dukedom of Volgradia, the chiefest place of honor through all Moscouy) whither, as to the open theater of al delights, the nobility and ladies resort-ed, among the which the chiefest, fairest, and chasteſt Margarita, presented her selfe, reioycing at the happie reconcilement: where being resolued by hir father of y<sup>e</sup> contract that was concluded upon, with blushes at first shewed hir modestie, and with obedience at last con-descended to his minde. In this rare fortresse of Arsinous (scituate by a gratiouſ and siluer floting riuier, inuironed with curious planted trees to minister shade, and sweete smelling floures, to recreate the sences; be-sides the curious knots, the daintie gardin plots, the rich tapestrie, the royall attendance) Protomachus found as euident signes of high spirit, as of huge expence: at the entrance, of his chamber (which had a prospect into a delicious garden in which al sorts of birds inclosed in a Cage of christall recorded their harmonies, whilst the gentle fall of a bubling fountaine seemed to yeeld a sweet and murmuring consent to their musicke) was placed that sentence of Drusius Germanicus which he carried alwayes ingrauied in his ring.

Illis est grauis fortuna quibus est repentina.

About the walles of the chamber in curious imagerie were the seuen sages of Greece, set forth with their seueral vertues, eloquently discouered in Arabicke verses: The bed appointed for the prince to rest himselfe, was of blacke Ebonie enchaſed with Rubies, Diamons and Carbuncles, made in form of an arch, on which by degrees mans state from infancie to his olde age was plainly depicted, and on the testerne of the bed the whole contents of the same most sagelie deciphered in these verses.

Humanæ Miseriæ discursus.

*O wherof boasteth man, or by what reason
Is filthie clay so much ambitious?
Whose thoughts are vaine, and alter euery season,
Whose deedes are damned, base, and vitious,
Who in his cradle by his childish crying
Presageth his mishaps and sorrowes nyng.*

*An infant first from nurces teat he sucketh
With nutritment corruption of his nature:
And from the roote of endlesse errorre plucketh
That taste of sinne that waites on euery creature,
And as his sinewes firme his sinne increaseth,
And but till death his sorrow neuer ceaseth.*

*In riper yeares when youtbly courage raineth,
A winters blast of fortunes lowring changes,*

*A flattering hope wherein no trust remaineth,
A fleeting loue his forward ioy estranges:
Atchive he wealth, with wastefull wo he bought it,
Let substance faile, he grieues, and yet he sought it.*

*In staied yeares when as he seekes the gleanings
Of those his times in studious Artes bestowed,
In summe, he oft misconstrueth wise-mens meanings,
Soiling the spring from whence his science flowed,
In all he gaines by perfect iudgement gained,
A hate of life that hath so long remained.*

*From height of throne to abiect wretchednesse,
From woonderous skill to seruile ignorance:
From court to cart, from rich to rechlesnesse,
The ioyes of life haue no continuance:
The king, the caitife wretch, the lay, the learned,
Their crowns, woes, wants, and wits with grieve haue erned.*

*The Judgement seate hath brawles, honour is bated,
The souldiers life is dayly thrall to danger,
The marchants bag by tempests is abated,
His stocke still serues for prey to euery stranger,
The scholler with his knowledge learnes repent,
Thus each estate in life hath discontent.*

*And in these trades and choice estates of liuing,
Youth steales on manly state, and it on age,
And age with weakned limmes, and mind misgiuing,
With trembling tongue repenteth youthly rage,
And ere he full hath learnd his life to gouerne,
He dies, and dying doth to dust returne.*

*His greatest good is, to report the trouble
 Which he in prime of youth hath ouerpassed,
 How for his graines of good he reapt but stubble,
 How lost by loue, by follies hew disgraced,
 Which whilst he counts, his sonne perhaps attendeth,
 And yet his dayes in selfe like follies endeth.*

*Thus mortall life on sodaine vanisbeth,
 All like a dreame, or as the shadow fleeteth,
 When sunne his beame from substance banisbeth,
 Or like the snow at once that dries and fleeteth,
 Or as the rainebow which by her condition
 Liues by the Sunnes reflect and opposition.*

*Thus life in name is but a death in beeing,
 A burthen to the soule by earth intangled:
 Then put thou off that vaile that lets thy seeing,
 O wretched man with many torments mangled,
 Since neither childe, nor youth, nor staid, nor aged,
 The stormes of wretched life may be asswaged.*

*And with the Egyptian midst thy delicates Present the shape of death in euery member,
 To make thee know the name of all estates:
 And midst thy pompe thy nyng graue remember,
 Which if thou doſt, thy pride shall be repressed,
 Since none before he dies is perfect blessed.*

Thus sumptuous was the lodging of Protomachus, but far more glorious the chamber of Margarita which seemed from the first day to be fashioned to her affections, for ouer the entrance of the doores was drawen and carued out of curious white marble, the faire god-

desse of chaste blushing at the sodaine interception of Ateon, and her naked nymphes, who with the one hand, couering their owne secret pleasures with blushes, with the other cast a beautifull vaile ouer their mistresse daintie nakednes: the two pillers of the doore were beautified with the two Cupids of Anacreon, which well shaped modestie often seemed to whip lest they should growe ouer wanton: no sooner was the inward beauties of the chamber discouered, but the worke wrought his wonder, and the wonder it selfe was equalled by the worke, for al the chaste Ladies of the world, inchased out of siluer, looking through faire mirrours of chrisolites, carbuncles, saphires and greene Emeraults, fixed their eies on the picture of eternitie, which fixed on the toppes of a testerne, seemed with a golden trumpet to applaud to them al: in the tapistrie (beutified with gold, and pearle) were the nine Muses curiously wrought, who from a thicket beheld amorous Orpheus making the trees leape through his laments, and as he warbled his songs the flouds of Hebrus staied their sources; and the birds that beheld their comfort, began likewise to carrol. It was strange to thinke, and more strange to behold, in what order Art matched with nature, and how the lymning painter had almost exceeded nature in life, sauing that the beauteous faces wanted breath, to make them alive, not cunning to proue them lively. Thus was both the emperor and his daughter lodged, wanting neither delights of hunting, nor other princely plesures, to entertain them: so curious was the good olde man, in pleasing his emperor and master. But among al other courtly delights Margarita met not the least, who in this castle found a companion to accompanie hir in life, and a chaste maide to attend her in loue, who (beside hir education, which was excellent, hir virtues such as equalled excellency, hir beuty so rare as exceeded both) was beloued by a noble lord of Moscouy, who for his singularities in poetry, and science in feats of arms, was rather the seignior, then second of al the empire. The enterchange of which affections was so conformable to the fancies of the princesse, that she, who was ordained to be the miracle of loue, leard by them and their maners the true methode of the same: for when Minecius courted his Pbilenia, Margarita conceited her Arsadachus; and by perciuing the true heart of the one, supposed the perfect habite of the other. If at any time cause of discourtесie grew betwixt Pbilenia and her friend, Margarita salued it, hoping by that means to sacrifice to Loue, to gratifie him in her fortunes, which were to succeede. How often would she make Minecius deserts excellent by her praise, and he his Pbilenia famous by his poerie? It was a world to see in them, that when loue waxed warm, those louers waxed wittie, the one to command, the other to consent: if at any time Minecius wrote an amorous sonnet, Margarita should see it: and if at any time Margarita read a sonet she would commend it to satisfie Pbilenia, and in that Arsinous (the father through the good opinion of Protomachus the Emperour, thought not amisse of the marriage betweene his daughter and the Moscouite,) he rather furthered then frouned on their pastimes: and Minecius hauing achiued her father and intangled the daughter in fancie, sought all meanes possible to satisfie her delights; sometimes therefore under a pastorall habite he would hide him in the groues and woods where the Ladies were accustomed to walke, where recording a routhful lay as they passed by; hee through his harmonie, caused them beleue that the tree tattled loue, and such was his method in his melancholy fancies, that his coate was accordant to his conceit, and his conceit the miracle of conceits: among the rest these of no small regard, I haue thought good in this place to register, which though but few in number are worthie the noting. First being on a time melancholy by reson of some mislikes of his mistris he wrote these sonets, in imitation of Dolce the Italian, and presented them in presence of the Princes Margarita, who highly commended them, ouer the top whereof he wrote this in great Roman letters.

PIETATI.

*If so those flames I vent when as I sigh,
Amidst these lowly vallies where I lie,
Might finde some meanes by swift addresse to flie
Vnto those Alpine toplesse mountaines high:*

*Thou shouldst behold their Icie burthens thawe,
And crimson flowers adorne their naked backs,
Sweete roses should inrich their winter wracks,
Against the course of kind and natures lawe.*

*But you faire Ladie see the furious flame,
That through your will destroyes me beyond measure,
Yet in my paines me thinkes you take great pleasure,
Loth to redeeme or else redresse the fame:*

*Nor bath your heart compassion of mine illes,
More cold then snow, more hard then Alpine bils.*

The other was this which seemed to be written with more vehemencie of spirit, and farre greater melancholie, which in a shepheards habite, sitting vnder a Mirtle tree he had mornfully recorded in the presence of his mistresse.

PIE T A T I .

*O desarts be you peopled by my plaints,
And let your plantes by my pure teares be watred,
And let the birds whom my sad mone acquaint,
To beare my hymnes haue harmonie in batred.*

*Let all your sauage citizens refraine,
To haunt those bowers where I my woes bewray,
Let none but deepe dispaire with me remaine,
To basle my death when hope doth will me stay.*

*Let rocks remoue for feare they melt to beare me,
Let Eccho whist for dread shee die to answere:
So liuing thus where no delights come neere me,
My manie mones more moouing may appeare:
And in the depth of all when I am climing,
Let loue come by, see, sigh, and fall a crying.*

This mourning passion pleased the ladies very highly, especially Philenia, who thought her selfe no little blessed to bee thus beloued: among the rest they gaue this that follows his deserued commendation; for being written in the desolate season of the yeare, and the desperate successe of his earnings, being so applied to his affects, and accordant with the yeares effects, (in my minde) deserueth no small good liking.

*With Ganimede now ioines the shining sunne,
And tbrough the world displaise bis cbiller flame,*

*Cold, frost, and snow, the meddowes, and the mountaines
Do wholie blend, the waters waxen Ice:
The meades want flowers, the trees haue parched leaues,
Such is the dolie season of the yeare.*

*And I in coldest season of the yeare,
Like to a naked man before the Sunne,
Whiles drought thus dwels in herbes and dried leaues,
Consume my selfe, and in affections flame
To cinders fall: ne helpest me frost or ice
That falles from off these Snow-clad cloudie mountains.*

*But when as shades new clothe againe the mountaines,
And daies wax long, and warmer is the yeare,
Then in my soule fierce loue congeales an Ice,
Which nor the force of fierce enflamed sunne
May thaw, nor may be moult with mightie flames,
Which frost doth make me quake like Aspen leaues.*

*Such time the windes are whist, and trembling leaues,
And beast grow mute reposing on the mountaines,
Then when aslaked beene the beauenly flames,
Both in the waine and prime tide of the yeare:
I watch, I warde, until the new sprung sunne,
And hope, and feare, and feele both cold and Ice.*

*But when againe her morrow-gathered Ice
The morne displaies, and frostieth drouping leaues,
And day renewes with rising of the sunne,
Then wailful forth I wend through vales and mountaines:
Ne other thought haue I day, moneth, and yeare,
But of my first the fatall inward flames.*

*Thus loue consumes me in his liuely flames,
Thus loue doth freeze me with his chillie Ice,
So that no time remaines me through the yeare
To make me blithe: ne are there any leaues:
Through al the trees that are vpon the mountaines,
That may conceale me from my sweetest sunne.*

*First shall the sunne be seene without his flame,
The wintred mountaines without frost or ice,
Leaues on the stones ere I content one yeare.*

This written in an amorous and more plausible vaine
(as that which most pleased the Ladies) and was not of least worth, I haue set downe last.

*O curious Gem how I enuie each while,
To see thee play vpon my Ladies paps,
And beare those Orbes wher Cupid layes his traps
From whence a gratioues Aprill still doth smile.*

*And now thou plaiest thee in that Garden gentill, Twixt golden fruite and neere her heart receiuest
Thy rest, and all her secret thoughts conceiuest
Vnder a vaile faire, white, diuine, and subtil.*

*Ye gentle pearles where ere did nature make you?
Or whether in Indian shoares you found your mould,
Or in those lands where spices serue for fuell:
Oh if I might from out your essence take you,
And turne my selfe to shape what ere I would,
How gladly would I be my Ladies Iewell?*

Many such like were deuised by Minecius, and allowed by Pbilenia, thorow which, Loue, that had newe

burgend his wings, began to flie, and being shut in close embers, brake out to open fire: so that like the Alcatras that scenteth farre, Pbilenia consented to yeeld him fauour who sought it, knowing that his wit like the rose being more sweet in the bud then in the floure would best fit her: and as the hearb Ephemerus that hath in his spring a sweete and purple floure, but beeing of tenne dayes growth conceiueth nothing of beauty, but is replenished with barrennesse, so course of time woulde change him; she made choice of him, since in that estate of life wherein he then liued, was fashioned to all pleasures, and disfurnished of no perfection, she knew him most meetest to enjoy hir beautie, and most accordant to possesse her marriage bed.

But leauwe we Pbilenia delighted in her Minecius, Margarita applauding them both, Protomachus conuersing with Arsinous, and the whole courtely traine of Mosco liuing in their content; and let vs haue an eie to Cusco and the emperor thereof, who no sooner arrived in this court, but like the good gardner, knowing his time to plant; like the fortunate husband well trained to yoake and plough, learned of Trifolium, who lifteth vp her leaues against tempest; and the emet, who by her prouision and trauel foretelleth a shoure and trouble that followeth, thought good (hauing beene taught by experience to take the opportunitie, knowing that princes and monarchs mindes are most subiect to alterations, according to the humours of their counsailes) to send his sonne Arsadacbus to Mosco: whereupon furnishing him with princely attendance and great treasures, he set him forward on his way, and at his last farewell, tooke his leauue of him in this fatherly and kingly manner: My sonne, as thou art yoong in yeres, so hast thou yong thoughts, which if thou gourne not with discretion, it will be the cause of thy destruction. Thou art leauing thy country for an other court, thy familiars, for new friends, where the least mite of follie in thee, will shew a mountaine, the least blemish, a great blot. Since therefore thine inclination is corrupt; and the faults which I smother, in that I am thy father, others will smite at, being thy foes: I will counsell thee to foresee before thou fall; and to haue regarde before thy ruine. Thou art borne a Prince, which being a benefit sent from heauen, is likewise an estate, subiect to all vn-happinesse; for, whereas much durt is, thither come many carriions: where high fortunes, many flatterers; where the huge cedar growes, the thistle springeth; where the foorde is deepest, the fish are plentiest; and whereas soueraigntie is, there are many seducers. Be thou therefore warie like the Vnicorne, which, for feare she should taste poison, toucheth with her horne, before she lap it with her lippe, so seeme thou, in faining credit to those, who meane to fawne on thee in thy error, to discouer them in their flights, as the fowle Antibias doth the Locust, and preuent them in their subtilties; as the fish Nibias doth the sea dragon. In chusing thy friends, learn of Augustus the Romane Emperour, who was strange and scrupulous in accepting friends, but changelesse and resolute in keeping them. Chuse not such companions, I pray thee, as will be drunke with thee for good fellowshippe, and double with thee in thine affaires; but use such as the thriftier sort doe by their threedbare coates, which being without wooll, they cast off, as things vnfitt for their wearing. And especially remember these short lessons, which the shortnesse of time maketh me vtter by a word, where indeede they require a whole dayes worke; beware of ouer-trust, lest you commit the sweetest of your life to the credite of an vncertaine tongue. Vse all such courtiers as visit you, in like manner as Goldsmiths do their mettall, who trie it by the touchstone if it be forthall, and melt it in the fire, before they vouchsafe it the fashion; so doe thou, and if they be counterfeit, they will soone leaue thee; if faithfull, they will the more loue thee. Trust not too much to the eare, for it beguileth many; nor to the tongue, for it bewitcheth more. Strive not with time in thy affaires, but take leisure; for a thing hastily enterprised, is more hastily repented. In your counsailes, beware of too much affection: and in your actions be not too proud; for the one will proue your little regard of conscience; the other the corruption of your nature. And since thou art going into a forren court, and must follow the direction of a second father, whose fauour if thou keepe, thou maist hap to be most famous, looke to thy selfe; for as Plato saith; to be a king, and to raigne; to serue, and be in fauour; to fight, and overcome, are three impossible things, and are onely distributed by fortune, and disturbed by her frowardnesse in following. Therefore (Protomachus) seeke in all things to follow his humour; for opinion is the chiefe step to preferment: and to be thought well of by the Prince, is no small profit; and if so be thou wilt please him, doe him many seruices, and giue him few words. In thy speech be deliberate, without bashfulnesse: in thy behauour courtly, without pride; in thy apparell princely without excesse; in thy reuenges bolde, but not too bloody; in thy loue be curteous, and not troublesome, and rather deserue a becke by bashfulnesse, then a checke by overboldnesse; for many which for good nurture haue by Ladies at first beene stroakt with the hand, haue for their impudencie afterwardes bin kickt out with the heele, or at leastwise thrust out by the head. Let it not be said of thee as it was of Hanibal among the Carthaginians, that thou neither giue that which thou promisest to thy friends, neither keepest any couenant with thine enemies; lest through the one thou be accompted without faith, through the other vnworthy life. Faine would I speake more (my sonne) but time suffereth me not: wherefore I pray thee by our gods, who gaue thee me, haue respect vnto my counsailes, lest thou grieue me; for better is a sonne lost in the cradle, then lewd and dissolute in the kingdome. This saide, the old Emperour Artosogon with piteous teares watered the cheeke of his corrupt sonne Arsadachus, and committing him to the conduct of his followers, and his presence to the hands of the chiefe peeres, he carefully (suspecting the worst) returned to his court.

Arsadachus being thus deliuered of his father, fedde himselfe with his owne naturall follies; and as the bird Lenca flying toward the south foretelleth stormes; euen so his lewd thoughts aimed at nothing, but wickednesse were the euident signes of his sinister behauour: for being well shaped by nature, there was not any man more estranged from nurture; so that it was to be feared, that he should sooner want matter to execute his dishonest mind vpon, then a dishonest mind to execute any lewd matter: for among the traine appointed by his father to attend him, he took no delight but in those who were most lasciuious, who ministring the occasions, bred in him an earnest desire to do ill. His crueltie he shadowed with a kind of courtly seueritie; his lust vnder the title of loue; his treasons under the pretext of true meaning: so like the faire lillie he cloaked his stincking scent with his white leafe; and like the bird Acanthus liuing among thornes, hee tooke no other pleasure then to conuerse among vnthriffts. The graue counsellers appointed him by his father he set light by: and like a second Cataline rather honoured him that did inuent newe mischiefe, then countenance those who did perswade him from his corrupt manners. From this so sowre a stocke what fruit may be expected but crabbes? from so lewd beginnings, how lamentable issues? At last, arriuing in Mosco, he was informed of the emperours being in the castle of Arsinous: whervpon addressing himselfe thither according to the mightinesse of his estate, he was by Protomachus entertained royally, who receiuing the presents of Artosogon, returned them backe, who brought them with high rewards, chusing among al the princely gentlemen of his court, those for to accompany Arsadachus who were vertuously disposed and wel indewed. Among the rest Minecius was appointed chiefe, whom Margarita highly trusted by reason of the trial Philenia had made of him. But among all other subtile demeanours in Court, this one was most to be admired, that Arsadachus shoulde make signes of great deuotion toward Margarita, and deluded her with most hatefull doublenesse; it was wonderfull to see him counterfet sighes, to faine loue, dissemble teares, to worke treasons, vow much, performe little; in briefe, vow al faith, and performe nothing but falshoode. Margarita (poore princesse) thinking all that golde which glittered; the stone pretious, by reason of his faire foile; the water shallowe, by reason of his milde silence, trusted so long, vntil she perished in her trust, wholy ignorant that loue is like the sea-starre, which whatso-euere it toucheth it burneth: for knowing the resolution of her father, the conclusion of the nobilitie, she beganne to straine her thoughts to the highest reach, fancyng euery motion, wincke, becke, and action of the Cuscan Prince, in such sort as that (assisted by the vertuous, constant, and vnspotted simplicitie of her nature) she seemed not to suspect whateuer she saw, nor to count it wrong, howsoeuer shee endured. Among all other the counsellers of this yoong and vntoward heire (about that time the flame of his follie long time smothered, beganne to smoake, besides his owne countermen, which were Brasidas, Capaneus, and other) there liued a great Prince in the court of Protomachus, who delighted rather to flatter then counsell, to feede corruptions then purge them, who had Macheuils prince in his bosome to giue instance, and mother Nana the Italian bawd in his pocket to shew his artificall villanies. This Thebion being in high account with the Emperour for his ripe wit, was quickly entertained by this vngracious Prince for his cunning wickednesse; who where Arsadachus was prone by nature to doe ill, neuer ceased to minister him an occasion of doing ill. For, perceiuing one day how with ouer-lustful eies y<sup>e</sup> yong prince beheld Pbilenia, egged him onward which had too sharp an edge, vsing old prouerbs to confirme his odious discourses and purposes: to be briefe, Arsadachus perceiuing Pbilenia and Margarita alwayes conuersant, resorted often to them, giuing the Emperours daughter the hand for a fashion, whilst Arsinous darling had the heart for a fauour. And the better to cloke this corruption, he vsed Minecius with more then accustomed familiarity, seeming to be very importunate in his behalfe with Pbilenia, where indeede he only sought opportunitie to discouer his owne loue. Whereupon beeing one day desired by Minecius to worke a reconcilement betweene him and his mistresse, by reason he knew him to be both eloquent and learned; hee taking the occasion at a certaine festiuall, whilst Minecius courted Margarita, to withdraw Philenia to a bay window in the castle, which ouerlooked the faire fieldes on euery side; where taking her by the hand he beganne thus:

Beautifull Philenia, if I knew you as secret as you are sage, I would discouer that to you in wordes, which I couer in my heart with sighes. If it bee loue, great prince, (saide Philenia little suspecting his treacherie) you may commend it to my eare, in that it is setled in this heart; as for silence, it is louers science, who are as curious to conceale, as cunning to conceiue: and as Hunters carrie the feather of an Egle against thunder, so louers beare the hearbe Therbis in their mouthes, which hath the vertue to stay the tongue from discourse whilst it detaineth the heart with incredible pleasure. If it be so saide Arsadachus, blushing very vehemently (for natures sparkes of hope were not as yet altogether ruined) I will holde Ladies weakenesse for worth, and disclose that secret which I thought to keep close. And what is that quoth Philenia? Loue saide Arsadachus, it is loue, and there hee pawsed. Loue, my Lord (quoth the Lady) why it is a passion full of pleasure, a god full of goodnes; and trust me, Margarita hath of late dayes stollen him from his mother at Paphos, to make him her play-fellow in Mosco, she proineth his winges euerie day, and curleth his lockes euerie houre; if he crie, she stilles him vnder your name, if he be wanton, she charmes him, with thinking on you: since then she hath the sicknessesse in her hand, that loueth you in her heart;

complaine not of loue since you command it. Here Arsadachus vnable to endure the heate of affection, or conceale the humour that restrained him, brake off hir discourse in this sort: Ah Philenia, if I did not hope, that as the hard oake nourisheth the soft silke-worme; the sharpe beech bringeth forth the sauourie ches-nut, the blacke Bdellium sweete gumme; so beautiful lookes concealed pittifull hearts, I would surffet in my sorrowes to the death, rather then satisfie thee in my discourse. But hoping of thy silence (Philenia) I wil disclose my minde: I loue Philenia; faire Philenia, I loue thee; as for Margarita, though she cherish beauty in her bosome, thou incloseth him in thy beutie; she may haue his feathers, but thou his fancies; she may please him well, but thou onely appease him. You do speake Greeke Arsadachus (saide Philenia) I vnderstand you not, I will paraphrase on it then (quoth the Prince) to make it plainer (for now occasion had emboldned him.) I come not to pleade a reconcilement for Minecius, as you suppose, but remorse for my selfe (sweete madam) on set purpose, for vpon you (faire madam) dependeth my life, in your handes consisteth my libertie; your lookes may deifie my delights; your loures dare me with discontents. I pray thee therefore, deere Philenia, by those chaste eies (the earnest of my happines) by this faire haire (the minister of all fauours) take compassion of Arsadachus, who being a prince, may preferre thee, and an emperour, wil loue thee: as for Margarita, let Minecius and her accord them, for onely I will make thee empresse, and she may make Minecius Emperour. Philenia vnable to indure his diuelish and damned assaults, flang from him with this bitter and sharpe answere: Did not my promise locke vppe these lippes (thou iniurious Prince) thy doublenes shoulde be as well knowne in this Court as thy name; but since my promises haue made thee presumptuous, I will heereafter heare before I answere, and trie before I trust. Is this the faith thou bearest to Margarita? thy friendship thou vowest to Minecius, to falsifie thy faith to one, and delude the trust of the other? Hence, poisoned, because I abhorre thee; and if heereafter thou haunt me with these lewd and lecherous salutes, trust me, the Emperour shall know thy treasons, and others shall bee reuenged on thee for thy treacheries. This saide, she thrust into the company of other Ladies, leauing him altogether confused: yet being made confident, by reason of her promise, he withdrew himselfe to his chamber, where tossing his licentious limmes on his soft bed, he fed on his desperate determination, till Thebion and Brasidas (the one a Cuscan, and the other a Moscouian, both of his dissolute counsell) entred his chamber: who after they had sounded the cause of his sorrowes, and the manner of the disease, quickly ministered the methode of curing it: for the day of Minecius marriage being at hand, and the nuptiall feast ordained the Monday following: they seeing the grounded affection of the Prince, concluded this; by the death of Minecius to minister Arsadachus his remedie, the complot whereof they layde in this sort: that (where in Mosco it was accustomed, that such nobles as married yong heires in their fathers house, shoulde after the ioyning of hands conduct them to their owne castles, there to accomplish the festiualles;) Arsadachus and they his counsellers with the assistance of their followers should lie in wait in the woodes of Mesphos, by which Minecius and his bride should needly passe, where they might surprise Pbilenia, and murther Minecius. .

Arsadabus too toward in all tyranny, no sooner conceiued the manner, then consented to the murther: and hauing a subtile and preuenting wit (and being very carefull howe to acquit himselfe of the matter) he asked Thebion how he should answere Protomachus. Tut said he, feare not that, for in the enterprise you shall be disguised, and Brasidas here your true counseller shall onely take the matter on him, and flee into Cusco, where your credit can countenance him against all iustice: for your selfe, fashion your minde for these few dayes to please Margarita, to appease Philenia, to further Minecius; seeme likewise discontented with your former motions, so shall you rid suspect in them, and be more readie in your selfe to effect; seeme now to be more deuout to the gods then euer, for this opinion of deuotion is a great step to performe any waughty action: for where we offer much to the gods who are most pure, our actions are least suspected; and reuenge is better performed in the Temple where wee pray, then in the field where wee fight: for the offender in that place trusteth sufficiently to his forces, wherein the defender presumeth too much on his deuotion. Tut the king that nipt Asculapius by the beard, gaue instance to those that follow to gripe the enemie by the heart. But (mighty prince) I must ende with &c. Arsadabus knowing the cloth by the list, the bill by the Item, the steele by the marke, and the work by the words, with a smile commended that which was concluded; and thereupon hasted to Court, where finding Margarita, Philenia, and Minecius in the priuie garden, he counterfeiting maruellous melancholie, hauing his coate suitable to his conceit, presented both the Ladies with this melancholie, which Minecius ouerreading most highly commended.

*My words, my thoughts, my vowes,
Haue soild, haue forst, haue stainde,
My tongue, my heart, my browes.*

*My tongue, my heart, my browes,
Shall speake, shall thinke, shall smile,
Gainst words, gainst thoughts, gainst vowes.*

*For words, for thoughts, for vowes,
Haue soiled, wrongde, and stained,
My tongue, my heart, my browes.*

Whereon henceforth I sweare:

*My words, my thoughts, my vowes,
So vaine, so vile, so bace,
Which brought, my tongue, heart, browes,
To shame, repulse, disgrace.*

*Shall euermore forbear,
To tempt that brow, that heart, that tongue, so boly,
With vows, with thoughts, with words, of too great folly.*

Margarita ouerreading this sonet, supposed it to be some melancholie report of his prettie wanton discourses with her, whereupon she spake thus: Arsadachus were I the priest to confesse you, you should haue but small penance; since in loue (as Pbilostratus saith) Cupid dispenseth with an oth, and words are good weapons to winne women, but if either of these haue defaulted in you, blush not, they shall be borne withal, for as the Mole hath foure feete and no eies; so a louer may be borne withall, for one maistaking among a many ver-

tues: to be briefe as the Logicians say passion is no more but the effect of action, the one whereof I haue gathered in these lines, the other thou must shew in thy life: this said she ceased, and Philenia blushed. Minecius to cut off these mute melancholies of his mistresse gaue the dagger a new haft, turning ouer the leafe to a second discourse, ministering Arsadachus by that meanes occasion to court Margarita, and himselfe opportunitie to pacifie Philenia, who by the carriage of her eie, shewed the discontent of her mind. In short words Arsadachus so behaued himselfe with his Mistresse, that neither Tiberius for his eie, neither Octavius for his affabilitie, neither Alexander for his scarre, nor Cicero for his mole, were so much commended, and noted, as the yong Cuscan was for his behauor. Lord how demurely would he loooke, when he thought most deuillishly? how could he fashion himselfe to haunt there, where he did most hate? to smooth choler vnder colour of friendship? so that Margarita, laughed for ioy, to see his grauitie, Minecius admired to behold his demeanour; but Philenia mistrusted his double and sinister subtilities. In a word, as the day succeedeth the night, and the shutting vp of the euening, is followed by the serenitie of the morning, so time passed, so long, til the present day aproched, wherein the marriage was to be solemnised: whereon the emperor (the more to dignifie the nuptials) countenanced the marriage with his presence. Thither likewise resembled the flower of the nobilitie and Ladies; among whom Margarita was not least sumptuous, for on that day hir apparel was so admirable, hir cariage and behauor so execelent, that had the wisest Cato beheld her, he would haue in some parte dismissed his stoical seueritie: hir golden haires curled in rich knots, and enterlaced with rich bands of diamonds and rubies, seemed to staine Apollos golden bush; enuirond with hir wreath of chrisolites, her eies like pure carbuncles, seemed to smile on the roses of her cheekes, which consortid with the beautie of the lillie, made her beutie more excelent, her eies, briars like the net of Vulcan, polished out of refined threeds of fine ebonie, her alabaster neck was encompassed with a coller of orient perle, which seemed to smile on her teeth when she opened her mouth, claiming of them some consanguinitie; her bodie was apparelled in a faire loose garment of greene damaske, cut vpon cloth of tissue, and in euerie cut, was inchased a most curious Iewell, wherein al the escapes of Iupiter, the wanton delights of Venus, and the amorous deceits of Cupid were cunningly wrought. Thus attired, she attended the bride, being hir selfe waited on by a troupe of beautifull damsels that day. Arsadacbus, though with little deuotion accompanid the Emperour, being that day clothed in red cloth of golde, betokening reuenge. It were a vaine matter to reckon vp the order of the bridegroome, the maiestie of his fauorers, the maner of the lords and ladies, the sumptuousnes of the feasts and triumphs, the harmonie and musicke in the temples; sufficeth it, that by the consent of Arcinous, Philenia was betrothed to Minecius, who seeing the day welnigh spent, and the time conuenient to depart to his castell, (after he had with humble reuerence inuited the emperor, his daughter, with the other Princes the next day to his festival, which he had prepared in his owne house) made all things in a readines, and departed, hauing receiued by the emperor and Arcinous, many rich rewards. Arsadacbus seeing the long desired houre of his delights at hand, stole out of the courte in great secret to his lodging, where arming himselfe according as Thebion had giuen him instructions; and attended by Brasidas and other Cuscans, his trustie followers, he presently posted into a groue, thorow which the new married couple should needly passe, where he priuily hid himselfe and his ambush. By that time the bright and glorious light of heauen, abasing himselfe by degrees, reposed his sweatie steedes in the soft bosome of cleere looking Eurotas; and euening the fore-messenger of the night had haled some starres to illuminate the hemisphere, when as Minecius (in the top of al his felicities) accompanied with his faire Philenia and other folowers, without either suspect of treason or other trouble entred the wood, and through the secretnesse thereof, hied them toward their determined abode. But al the way Philenia took no comfort, dreadfully suspecting the subtile dealings of Arsinous; and oft she sighed, and often she dropt downe lillies on the roses of her face, or rather, such sweete teares wherewith the blushing morne enchaseth the soft Hyacinth. Minecius seeing her in these passions, perswaded her vnto patience: but euен as (according to the opinion of Aristotle) lions, beares, eagles, griffins, and al other birds and beasts whatsoeuer, are then more egre and cruel when they haue yong ones: so Philenia hauing now a second care annexed to her owne safetie, (which was for her deere husband) could not cease to perplexe her selfe, and to feare for him. Long had they not trauelled, but they discouered the ambush, and the ambush assaulted them: among which Arsadacbus greatly disguised, as he that enuied the fortunes of Minecius, tooke holde on the reines of Pbileniaes palfrey, whilst Thebion, and Brasidas, with others, with their naked swordes beganne to assault Minecius and his followers. He that hath seene the faulcon seizing his keene talents in the flesh of a sillie doue, and playing his sharp bill on her soft feathers, might haue thought on Arsadachus, who no sooner tooke holde on her, but pulling the maske from her face, enforced many violent kisses on her soft lips, whilst she exclaiming on the name of Minecius, and crying, help, repulsed the iniuries with her white hands, which were iniuriously offred to her delicate face. Minecius suspecting no more then was true, and vnable to endure further violence, deemed it greater honor to die in defence of his mistresse, then beholde the impeach of her credit, left his companions who fled, and with naked sword smote Arsadachus a mightie blowe on the helme, through which he staggered, and lost his hold-fast; then renewing his mistresse which was almost dead for feare, hee boldly spake thus to Arsadachus; Traitor, and coward, that in time of peace goest thus armed, and with vniust armes assaultest naked knights, if any sparke of honor raigne in thee, giue me armes and weapons; if thou seek my life, take it from me with courage like a knight, not by treason like a coward; if my Loue, I pray thee take these eies from their sight, these handes from their sense, and this tongue from his speech: for whilst the one may see, the other fight, and the third threaten: thou shalt haue no part of that wherein my felicity is reposed; thus saying, he remounted Philenia: whilst he was thus occupied, Arsadachus swelling with impatience after he had bin animated by his followers, replied thus: Soft (amorous sir) this is no meate for your mowing, you best were rather to fall to your prayers, then to vse prating, to beseech for life, then to seech loue: for assure thy selfe, there is no way with thee but death, nor no loue for Philenia but mine. This said, he gaue Minecius a mightie stroake on the head, so that the blood ouerflowed his costly attire, and he fell to the ground. Philenia halfe madde with melancholie, leapt from her palfrey to comfort her paramour; and seeing the whole troope of assailants ready to charge her husband, and assured that Arsadachus was the chiefe of them, with such a piteous looke as Venus cast on bleeding Adonis shee behelde Minecius, and wiping his wounds with one hand, and touching the knees of Arsadachus with the other, she spake thus: Ah Cuscan prince though thy face is shadowed, I knowe thee by these follies, though thy raiments are changed, I iudge thee by thy rashnesse, what seekest thou? if my fauour, it is already bequeathed: if reuenge, how base is it against a woman? if Minecius life, how iniurious art thou to wrong him that loues thee as his life? Ah cruell as thou art (yet would thou wert not cruel) thou knowest Chrieses teares could moue Achilles, the one proceeding from a seely maid, the other pitied by a princely man: thou knowest that Alexander to Campaspe, Pompey to his prisoner, and other great conquerours haue rather shewed compassion then victorie, and wilt thou who art equall to all in power, be inferior to al in vertue? Ah wo is me poore Philenia that haue planted my affections there where they are watered with warme blood, and heape my compassion there where working teares haue no boote. I pray thee gracious prince, I pray thee be gracious: diuide not those by murther, whome the gods haue vnited by marriage: seperat not those soules by death whome the destinies haue appointed to liue. In speaking these words she beheld Minecius, who through the grieuousnesse of his wounds, fell in a swowne: whereupon she casting off all care of life, and hope of comfort, closed her soft lippes to his, breathing the balme of her sighes into his breathlesse bodie, clapping his pale cheeke with her pretie hands, moisting his closed eies, with her christal teares, so that they who were the very authors of her sorow, gan sigh to see her ceremonies. Wilt thou hence (said she) Minecius? Oh stay for Philenia, let our soules post together to Elizium that on earth here may not enjoy their happinesse; for nothing shall separate me from thee (my loue:) if thou do banish sight from thine eie, I will drieue out blood from my heart: if thy beautie grow pale as nyng death, my cheeke shall pine as seeking death: if thou faint through feeblenesse of bodie, I will default through waightinesse of discontent: and since we may not liue together, we will die together. With this Minecius rowsed himselfe: and Arsadacbus inflamed, replied; Pbilenia, there is no raunsome of thy husbands life, but thy loue, nor no meanes to pacifie me, but my pleasure of thee: speake therefore, and sound the sentence of my delight, or Minecius destruction: which said, he approched to kisse hir: whom Minecius though halfe dead beganne to rescue: and Pbilenia halfe bedlam enforced her selfe in these termes: Traitor disloyall and damned leacher, since neither teares, nor tearmes will satisfie thee, vse thy tyranny (for better were it for me to be buried with honor, then bedded with infamie) do therefore thy worst, thou hated of the gods, and despised among men, for no sooner shalt thou assaile my husband, but thou shalt sliae me: each drop of his blood shall be doubled by mine: and as in life he should haue beene the shelter of mine honor, so euen in death wil I be the shield to defend him frō the assaults of his enemies: come therefore ye murtherers, in growing cruel to me, you wil proue pitiful: first take my life, that Minecius beholding my constancie, may die with more comfort. Thus cried she out with many teares; and Minecius disswaded her. But the time passing away, and Arsadachus fearing delaies, seeing all hope lost, grew to desperate furie, so that animating his followers, they set on Minecius, who valiantly defended himselfe. It was a world to see, how during the conflict Philenia be-stirred her, letting no blow slip without the warde of her body, lying betweene the sword of the enemy for her husbands safetie, crying out on the heauens til she was wellnie hoarse with crying. At last Minecius lacking blood, Philenia breath, both of them entangled arme in arme, fell downe dead, leauing the memorie of their vertues to be eternized in all ages. Arsadachus seeing the tragedies perfourmed (not without some sighs which compassion extorted from him, as strokes do fire out of hard flint) he presently sent Brasidas away, as it was concluded (attended by those Cuscans that followed him in the enterprise) and hee with Thebion speedily posted to their lodging, both vndiscouered and vnsuspected.

By this, such as attended Minecius to his castle had with speedy flight entred the court of Arsinous; who certified of his daughters danger, aduised the emperour, and presently with certaine armed souldiers, posted on to the rescouse: meane while Protomachus made search through al the court for such as were absent; and they that were appointed to the action entring Arsadachus chamber, found him in his fore sleepe: where-through the emperour being aduertised, gan little suspect him: in like sort found they Thebion, only Brasidas was missing. In the meanwhile Arsinous hauing attained the place of the conflict, found both the murthered bodies sweltered in their blouds: whereupon falling from his horse in great furie, he thus exclaimed on fortune. Oh fortune, wel art thou called, the enemie of vertue, since thou neither fauourest such as deserue wel, nor destroyest those that performe ill; for hadst thou not beene parciall, my daughters chastitie had preuented her death, and her murtherers crueltie had beene their owne confusion: woe is me that haue lost my floure in the bud, my hope in the eare, and my haruest in the blossome. Ah my deere Philenia, deare wert thou to me, that bought thee with much care, and haue lost thee with more: deere wert thou vnto me, who hast cost me many broken sleepes to bring thee vp, many carefull thoughts to bestow thee, more fatherly teares to preuent thy ouerthrow, and now hauing reared the fortresse of my delights, the tempest of iniurious fortune hath destroyed it: wo is me that am carefull to publish my paines, and negligent to seeke remedy; fond am I to defie fortune from whom I cannot flie: ah Arsinous weep not her that may not be recalled with teares, but seeke to reuenge her; shew thy selfe rather fatherly in act, then effeminate in teares? Which said, he gouerned himselfe, causing the dead bodies honorably to be couered and conueied with him to his castle, where within a temple erected to chastitie, hee reared a faire tombe of white marble, wherein with the generall teares of the emperour and his whole court, these two faithful louers were entombed, and ouer their graues thus written:

*Vertue is dead, and bere she is enshrined,
Within two lifelesse bodies late deceased:
Beautie is dead, and bere is faith assigned
To weepe her wracke, who when these died first ceased,
Pitie was dead when tyranny first slew them,
And beauen inioies their soules, tho earth doth rew (them,
Since beautie then and vertue are departed,
And faith growes faint to weep in these their fading,
And vertuous pitie kind and tender hearted,
Died to behold fierce furies fell inuading.*

*Vouchsafe ye heuens that fame may haue in keeping
Their happy and thrice blessed names, for whome
Both vertue, beautie, pittie died with weeping,
And faith is closed in this marble tombe.*

This register of his loue did Arsinous with many teares write vpon the toombe of his deceased sonne in law and daughter, who had no sooner furnished the funeralles, but Pbidas a page of Philenias, who during the mortall debate, and bloody massacre, had hid himself in a thicket, and ouerheard the whole discourse of Arsadachus, repaired to the court, who calling Arsinous aside, with pitious teares discoursed vnto him the whole tragedy in such ruthfull manner, as that it was hard to say, whether the lad in bewraying it, or the father in hearing it, were more compassionate. The old man certifid the truth, though scarce able, yet smothered his grieves, till oportunitie offered, suffering the emperour (like a wise man) to follow his owne course, who the next morning assembling his nobilitie, forgot not Arsadachus, who making semblance to haue but new inteli-gence of the murther of Minecius and his loue, repaired to the Court in mourning apparrell, and being present when the matter was debated, seemed to weepe bitterlie, crying out on the emperor for Iustice, exclaiming on the iniquitie of time, the crueltie of men, and tyrany of loue. Protomacbus was not a little pleased herewith, neither was Margarita, aggreeued to heare it, but Arsinous boyled in choler to see it: at last it was found out by a scarfe which Brasidas had let fall (and was after taken vp by one of those who fled) that he was at the murther. whereupon his absence was sufficient to conuict him, and Arsadachus called forth to answere for him in that he was his attendant, spake thus: Noble emperor, the gods that haue placed thee in thy kingdome, shall beare me witnes, how I grieue this accident, and willingly would reuenge it, and since my follower to my defame, hath (as it is supposed) bin a principall, vouchsafe me noble emperor licence for a time to depart to Cusco, where I will both discharge my choller, purge my grieve, and be so reuenged of Brasidas (who as I heare is fled, and by the token is guilty) as all the world shall ring of the iustice, and ridde me of suspicion. The emperor not hearing one that dared say his letters should suffice, endeuouring himselfe to seeke the confederates; and because by his lookes he perceiued some discontents in Arsadachus, he sought al the means he could to please him, and remembred himselfe (that those good deeds which are done to our self beloued, are esteemed as to our selfe) he highly promoted Thebion, thinking thereby to winne the heart of Arsadachus, so that he pretermitted no consultations, wherein Thebion was not chiefe, neither bestowed benefits, wherein he had no part. The yong prince measuring al this according to the corruption of his nature, supposed these fauors were but to sound him, and that Thebion being wonne by benefits, would easily consent to bewray him, whereupon he conceiued a deadly hate against him, and perseuered it so long till he effected it in this manner to his death: For knowing that Margarita deereley loued him, ayming all her fashions to his fancies, hir behauours, to his humors, he began anew to cloake with her, shewing her so vndoubted signes of assured affection, that she seemed in a paradise of pleasure, to see his pliantnes, and hauing with sweete words, trained her to his lewer, he attended such an occasion, as that he found her alone walking in the priuie garden in her meditations, (for those that loue much, meditate oft) where nyng her with a courtly salute, he thus found her affection: Faire Princesse, if either my vnfained loue haue any force, or your vertuous nature true compassion, I hope both my sorrowes shal be pittied, and my discontents succored. Why what aggreeueth my deere Lord said Margarita? (and heartily she sighed in saying so) is either our court vnpleasant, our entertainement vnworthie, our ladies vnapt to worke your delights? beleeue me good prince, if Mosco cannot suffice to please you, Europe and the worlde shall be sought to satisfie you. Kinde words good madam, said Arsadacbus, act and silence must content me, which if you will vnder the faith of a noble and famous princesse promise me, I shall be beades man, to pray for your happinesse, and rest yours vnfained in all seruice and loyaltie. Margarita hauing gotten such an oportunitie to please him both vowed and reuowed all secrecie, swearing although it were with the hasard of hir life to do whatsoeuer him best liked, and conceale what so it please him to discouer, so great is the simplicitie of women, who are soone led where they most like. Arsadacbus finding the iron hot, thought good to strike; the fruit ripe, began to gather, the floure springing, ceased not to water: and thus began to worke her. True it is madam, that where loue hath supremacie, all other affections attend on it, so that neither the eie beholdeth, neither the sent smelleth, nor the eare heareth, neither the tongue speaketh any thing, but is to the honour of the best beloued: this finde I true in my selfe, who since I surrendred you the fort of my fancie, finde my delights metamorphosed into yours, yet so much am I tied vnto you, as that danger which either attempteth or toucheth you, or any of yours, wholly attainteth me. The proofe wherof you may perceiue in this, that hauing heard through my intire acquaintance with Thebion, a certaine resolued determination in him, to make your father away, by reason of his familiar accesse to his maiestie euerie morning, I could not choose but discouer his drift vnto you sweete Princesse, whose dangers must needely second your fathers subuersion. Thebion said Margarita, alas my lord what reason should moue him hereunto, since no one is more fauoured by my father then he? can fauour possibly be requited with such falsehood? Doubt you it said Arsadacbus? why madam where is greater treason, then there where is least mistrust? vnder the cleare Christall lurketh the mortall worme, vnder the greene leafe the greedie serpent, and in fairest bosomes are falcest hearts. Thinke not that liberallitie hath any power in depraued minds, for whereas the thoughts hant after emperie, hemd are each supposes, faith dieth, truth is exiled nulla fides regni, if you haue read histories, you shall finde that they soonest haue supplanted their Princes, who haue bin least suspected, as may appeare by Giges, and other: cast therefore hence (my deare ladie) all thought of excuse, and bethinke you of preuention; for it is greater wisedome, to see and preuent, then to heare and neglect. Thebion hath conspired and doth conspire, resoluing with himselfe to vsurp the empire, murther Protomachus, banish you; all which I haue learned of him, dissembling my affections towards you, and soothing him in his corruptions; yea so farre haue I brought him, and so neere haue I wrought it, that I can assure you to morrow morning is the last of your fathers life, vnlesse you preuent it. Alas my lord (said Margarita weeping) how may this be? Thus my sweete loue and thus it is concluded (quoth Arsadachus) you know he hath euerie morning of late priuate accesse vnto your fathers chamber, where being alone with him and the vnsuspected emperour in his bed, he hath resolued with his dagger to stabbe him to the heart; which secret, since the gods haue opened vnto me, I think good to discouer vnto thee (my deere heart) the meanes to preuent (which shall the more easily be performed if thus you worke it) no sooner let the day appeare, but in the morning be-times enter you your fathers chamber, where after you haue saluted him, you may seeme to vtter this; that in a dreame this night you were mightily troubled about his Maiestie, and so troubled, that you thought Thebion entring his chamber with a hidden poiniard stabbed him to the heart. But what needes these circumlocutions or delaies quoth Margarita if the treason be so manifest? My lord, if it please you I will discouer it presently and plainly. The gods forbid (said Arsadachus) that my desires should be so hindered, for (my noble princesse) the delay I seeke, and the order I prescribe you, is rather to ground your fathers affection towards me, and get the credite of this seruice then otherwise; yea the loue I beare thee sweete Ladie; (with that hee sighed and sealed it with a kisse) for hauing by this meanes wonne fauour, both our fortunes shall be bettered, our marriage hasted, and our fames magnified.

Margarita (poore princesse) supposing all that golde that glistered, yeelded easie consent; whereupon after many amorous promises, the yong prince tooke his leaue, willing her to be carefull in the morning, and to leaue the rest of the affaires to his faithfulness, and thus they parted.

But marke the nature of malice (which as the poet describeth is sleepelesse, restlesse and insatiate) for Arsadachus being departed from Margarita, and earnestly bent on his reuenge, sought out Tbasilides the page of Thebion, whom he so cunningly wrought with othes, gifts, and gold, that he made him both promise and practise the meanes to put a certaine scedule into the pocket of his masters gowne which he vsually ware, the which he himselfe had wrote, and wherein he behaued himselfe with such art, as that he had not only counterfeited Thebions hand, but also the names of al such as either he thought his fauorites, or else likely to thwart his proceedings in court, among which hee forgote not Ctesides a graue counsellor of the emperors, who the day before was very earnest with Protomacus to marry his daughter, shewing him euident reasons of Arsadachus counterfeiting. All these things falling out according to his own devise and fantasie, he sought out Thebion that night, whom he vsed with the greatest familiaritie that might be: and to insinuate the more into his fauour, hee bestowed on him a poiniard, whose pummel was a bright carbuncle, the haft vnicorns horne, a iewell which Thebion had long time greatly desired, praying him of all loues to weare it for his sake; and since he was in such estimation to continue him in the good grace of the Emperour. Thebion made proud to be intreated and presented by so high a prince, promised both to weare his gift, and to winne him fauour. Wherupon since the night was farre spent Arsadachus repaired to his lodging, Thebion to his rest. But vaine is the hope that de-pendeth on the next day, and those worldly honours that doe wait on this life; for the one is preuented oftentimes by iniurious fortune, the other altered by our ouerweening mistrusting words, actions, and desires, and shall manifestly appeare in the sequell of this historie. For no sooner gan bright day to chase away blacke darkenesse, and the stooping stares doe homage to the rising sunne, but Margarita arose, apparelling herselfe freshly like Maie, in a gowne of greene sendall, embrodered with all kind of floures in their natvie colours, and remembiring her selfe of the affaire she had in hand;

she vnder the conduct of loue (who is both a cunning dissembler and nice flatterer) hasted to her fathers chamber, and humbly admitted to the presence of the emperour by the gromes that attended him, (with a trembling hand, and a bashfull countenaunce: spreading the mute oratorie of her teares, vpon her blushing cheeke) she awoke him. Protomacbus amased to see his daughters sodaine accessse, and sad countenance, began thus: How now my deere Margarita, what, hath loue awaked you this morning, threatning you with some apparant sorrow to make your after-good in deede more sauourie? why hangeth your countenance? why tremble your limmes? what moueth this your amasednes?

sweete maiden tell thy father. Ah my Lord (said Margarita) it is loue indeede that disturbes mee, but not that loue that is painted with feathers, wanton looks, that loue that whispereth affections in ladies eares, and whetteth womens wittes, making the eie traitor to the heart, and the heart betrothed to the eie; but that loue which was ingendred by nature, ordained by the heauens, attired by reuerence and duetie, and tired with nothing but death, that loue (and so speaking she wept) hath awaked me, to forewarne you. Protomachus somewhat vrged by these teares, rowzed himselfe on his pillow, and began more intentiuely to listen, asking her what had hapned? Ah deare father, said she, this night that is past I was greatly troubled with a grieuous dreame; me thought I saw Thebion, a man in high authoritie in your court, attended by many insolent rebels, who violently brake open your maiesties priuie chamber, murthered you in your bed, and dispossest me of my heritage, me thought euen then you cried vnto me; ah Margarita help me! and I with outcries calling for rescouse, Arsadachus came in hastily, who with his sword bereft Thebion of life, and me of feare: And so you waked and found all false (quoth the emperour) Tut, doate not on dreames, they are but fancies: and since I see (sweete daughter) that you are so troubled by night, I will shortly find out a yong prince to watch you, who shall driue away these night-sprights by his prowesse. Thus spake Protomachus smiling, yet smothered he suspect in his heart: for such as haue much, suspect much.

No sooner were these discourses finished, but Arsadachus knowing how to take his time, hastily approched the Emperors chamber, where intimating some occasion of high import, he required to speake with Protomachus, and was presently let in. The Emperour conceiuing new suspicions vpon this second assault, beganne to misdeeme: and seeing Arsadachus with gasty lookes entring the chamber, was ready to speake vnto him when as the yong Cuscan preuented him, saying: The gods be blessed (noble Emperor) that haue by their foresight rid me of feare, and reft you of danger; for sore haue I feared lest your maiestie should haue perished before you had beene aduertised: Alas, why in such dangers are you vnattended vpon, when the foe is at the doore? why is not the guard in a readinesse? Ah royall Moscouite rowze thee and arise, and honour the sequele of the greatest treason that euer was contriued. Why what tidings bringeth Arsadachus said Protomachus? Thus mighty prince (said he) yesternight very late when I entred Thebions chamber vnawares, I found his page (his master being absent) laying certaine waste papers out of his pocket vpon his table, perusing which, (as I was accustomed) by reason of the new familiaritie betweene vs, I found one among the rest where (alas that subiects should be so seditious) there was a conspiracy signed by Thebion, Ctesides, and others (whose names I remember not) to make your mightinesse away, and Thebion to enioy the crowne: the maner to execute their stratageme, was when you least suspected, this morning; at which time Thebion by reason of his neere familiaritie and accesse to you, should enter your chamber and murther you. This paper when I had ouer-read, I laide aside, making semblance of no suspition, resoluing this morning early to signifie the whole vnto your maiestie, whose life is my libertie, whose happines is my honour, whose death were my vtter ruine and detriment. Thebion a traitor quoth Protomachus; are my fauours then so smally regarded? is my curtesie rewarded with such cursednesse? Well Arsadacbus (said he) happy art thou in bewraying it, and vnfornatue he and his confederates in attempting it, for they all shall die.

This saide, he presently attired himselfe, laying certaine of his trustiest gentlemen in guard behinde the tapistrie of his priuy closet, expecting the houre of a most cruell reuenge: when as sodainely Thebion knocked at the doore, and was presently admitted, who had scarcely said, God sauе the emperour, but euen in the bending of his knees, hee was thrust through by Arsadacbus, and the other of the guard hearing the broile, came and mangled him in peeces, casting the residue to the Emperours lions according as hee had appointed. Protomachus grudging at the sodaine death of Thebion, began to chide Arsadacbus for his haste, saying, that it was inconuenient for a subiect to be punished before hee were conuicted. Conuicted (said Arsadacbus) why doth your grace suspect his guiltinesse? Beholde saide hee (drawing out the poinyard which Thebion had at his back) the instrumēt that should haue slaine you, see (saide hee) taking the schedule out of his pocket the confederacie to betray you; and should such a wretch liue then to iustifie? No (mighty Emperour) my soule abhorres it; the care I haue of you will not suffer it; the loue I beare Margarita will not indure it. The Emperour ouer-reading the writing, and seeing the poinyard, gaue credible beleefe, and with teares of ioy imbracing Arsadacbus he said thus: Ah my sonne, the gods haue blessed vs in sending vs such a friend, who hath saued mee from imminent danger, and will make me fortunate by marriage, hold take thee (said he) my Margarita, and with her, enjoy my empire; and more, take thou my loue, which is so rooted in me toward thee, that death may not vntwine it. Arsadachus thanked the Emperour for this fauour, and recomforted Margarita with sweete words, being almost dead to see the stratageme passed. Meane while the Emperour gaue present direction to hang all the other conspirators, and put them to other tortures, who presently without knowing why, or licence to answere, were tyrannously executed; so great is the tyranny of princes which are subiect to light belief, and led by subtil suggestions.

The rumour of this accident spread through the Court, moued sundry imaginations in mens minds, some praised Arsadachus, some suspected the practise, all feared; for whereas iustice sleepeth being ouerborne with tyranny, the most secure haue cause to feare; among the rest Arsinous wept bitterly, knowing in himselfe the vertue of Ctesides, and remembiring him of the murther of his deere Pbilenia, hee could not cease but welnie bedlam to crie out on the heauens, whose tragedie we must now prosecute, and leau Arsadachus and his Margarita to their mery conceits and discourses.

Protomacbus after that this late treason had beene discouered, beganne to be more warie, to keepe greater guard, and to vse Arsinous and the rest of the nobilitie with lesse familiaritie, who good old man, hauing before time beene shrewdly hurt, tooke this vnkindenesse to the heart (for where greatest loue is, there vnkindenesse is most grieuous) for that cause almost desperate he sought out the emperour, and finding opportunitie, he humbling him on his knees beganne thus: As Traiane

(dread Monarch) was commended in Rome for hearing poore mens complaints, so art thou condemned in Mosco for shutting thy gates against all kind of sutors, so as (nowadayes) thou hearest by others eares, workest by others hands, and speakest by others mouthes, where-through iustice is made a nose of waxe warmed, and wrought according to all mens pleasures, and the poore are left to complaine: the which the gods (if thou repent not) wil shortly punish in thee. Beleeue me (good Emperour) such as shut their gates against their subiects, cause them not to open their hearts willingly to obey them; and they that norish feare in their bosoms without cause, make themselues guilty of some crime by their suspect. Wherfore fliest thou the sight of those that loue thee? shutting thy eares lest thou heare those complaints that haue already deaffed the heauens for equitie. O prince, looke abroad, it behoueth thee; doe iustice, for it becommeth thee, and heare olde Ar-sinous a haplesse father; father doe I say, being thus robbed of my children? nay a desolate caitife, and doe me right. That iustice becommeth thee, marke these reasons: Homer desirous to exalt it, could not say more, but to call kings the children of the God Jupiter, and not for the naturalitie they haue, but for the office of iustice which they minister. Plato saith, that the chiefeſt gift that the gods haue bestowed on man is iustice; that therefore thou may seeme rightly descended of the gods, vouchsafe me audience, and to the end thou may boast thy ſelfe to enjoy the leaſt gift of the gods, ſuccour me. Thou knowest my Pbilenia is ſlaine, but by whose hands thou knowest not; thou hearest Minecius is murthered, but by whom thou enquireſt not, thou haſt rubbed the gall, but not recured the wounde; thou hast tempered the medicine, but hast not ministred it: yea thou hast refreshed the memorie of my grieves very often, but remedied them neuer. Three moneths are past, since thou hast made inquirie of my daughters death, and she that I nourished vp twentie yeares and better, is forgotten of all, but her olde father, lamented of none, but Arsinous: and can be reuenged by none but Protomachus. O Emperour I heare their discontented grieve crying out in mine eares, and appealing to thee by my tongue for iustice, me thinkes bloudlesse Minecius standeth by thy throne vpbraiding thee of his seruices, and conuicting thee of ingratitude. Philenia crieth iustice Protomachus, iustice, not against Brasidas, who was but agent, but against Arsadachus the principall, that wretched Arsadachus, who in her life time assaied to moue her to lust, and wrought her death, in that she would not consent to his lust, against Arsadachus the viper nourished in your bosome, to poison your owne progenie, the locust dallied in Margaritaes lap, to depriue her of life. Ah, banish such a bewitched race of the Cuscans, I meane not out of your kingdome, but out of life; for he deserueth not to beholde the heauens, that conspireth against the gods, root out that blood-thirsty yongman, root out that murtherer, roote out that monster, from the face of nature, that the poore deceased ghostes may be appeased, and their poore father pacified. Shew thy selfe a prince now Protomachus; the surgeon is knowne, not in curing a greene wound, but in healing a grieuous fistula; the warriour is knowne, not by conquering alittle village, but a great monarchie; and a prince is perceiued in preuenting a capitall pestilence, not a priuate preiudice. That I accuse not Arsadachus wrongfully, behold my witnesses:

which saide, he brought out Phileniae page, who confidently and constantly auowed all he had told his master in the presence of the emperour: wherefore (noble monarch) haue compassion of me, and by punishing this tragicke tyranny make way to thine owne eternitie.

Protomachus hearing this accusation was sorely moued, now thinking all trueth which Arsinous had said by reason of that vertue he had approued in him in times past, now deeming it false, in that Arsadachus (as he supposed) had lately and so luckily preserued him from death. For which cause, calling the yong prince vnto him, he vrged him with the murther before the old man, and the yoong ladde his accuser, who shooke off al their obiections with such constancie, that it was to be wondered: what saith he Protomachus, am I, who haue lately manifested my zeale in sauing your life made subiect to the detraction of an old doting imagination with his pratling minister, I hope your Maiestie (saith he) measureth not my credit so barely, neither wil ouerslip this iniurie slightly, since you know, that when the murder was done I was in my bed, when the tragedie was published, I was the first that prosecuted the reuenge; and more, the friendship twixt Minecius and me should acquit me of this suspition. But it may be, that this is some set match of Thebions confederates that seeke my death, which if it shall be heere countenanced, I will returne to Cusco, where I dare assure my selfe against al such subtillties. This said, Arsadachus angerly departed: for which cause, Protomachus fearing his speedy flight, sent Margarita to pacifie him; and causing the tongue of the guiltlesse lad to be cut out, and his eies to be prickt out with needles, both which were guiltie (as he said) the one of pretended seeing, the other of lewd vttering. He banished the olde Duke of Volgradia, who for all his faithfull seruices, had this lamentable recompence, and remoued himself, his court, and daughter to Mosco, where wee will leauue him a while.

Arsinous thus banished from the Court, after he had furnished himselfe of necessaries conuenient for his iourney, trauelled many a weary walke towards the desarts of Ruscia, crying out and exclaiming on the heauens for iustice; his hoarie lockes and bushy beard he carelesly suffered to grow (like to those Moscoes who are in disgrace with their emperors) seeming rather a sauage man than a ciuile magistrate (as in time past he had beene.) Long had hee not trauelled among many barren rockes and desolate mountaines, but at last hee arriued in a solitarie Groue encompassed with huge hilles, from the topes whereof, through the continuall frosts that fell, a huge riuier descended, which circling about a rocke of white marble, made it (as it were) an Island, but that to the northward there was a pretie passage of twelue foote broade, deckt with ranks of trees, which gaue a solitary accesse to the melan-cholie mansion; mansion I call it, for in the huge rocke was there cut out a square and curious chamber, with fine loopes to yeeld light, hewen thereout (as might be supposed) by some discontented wood-god wedded to wretchednesse. Here Arsinous seated himselfe, resoluing to spend the residue of his dayes in studies, praying to the gods continually for reuenge, and to the end (if happily any shoulde passe that way) that his deepe sorrow might be discouered, he with a punchion of steele in a table of white Alabaster engraued this ouer the entrance of his caue.

Domus doloris.

*Who seekes the caue where horride care doth dwell,
 That feedes on sighes, and drinkes of bitter teares:
 Who seekes in life to finde a liuing bell,
 Where he that liues, all liuing joy forbeares:
 Who seeks that griefe, that griefe it selfe scarce knowes it,
 Here let him rest, this caue shall soone disclose it.*

*As is the mite vnto the sandie seas,
 As is the drop vnto the Ocean stremes,
 As to the orbe of beauen a sillie pease,
 As is the lampe to burning Ticius beames:
 Euen such is thought that vainely doth indeuer,
 To binke the care liues here, or count it euer.*

*Here sorrow, plague, dispaire, and fierce suspect,
 Here rage, bere ielousie, bere cursed spight,
 Here murther, famine, treason and neglect,
 Haue left their stings to plague a wofull wight:
 That liues within this tombe of discontent,
 Yet loathes that life that nature hath him lent.*

In this solitarie and vncouth receptacle, Arsinous liued, turning of his steede, to shift for foode amid the forest, and assending euerie day to the height of the rocke, hee shed manie salte teares before the Image of Minecius and Philenia, whose pictures he had brought with him from his castell, and erected there: and after his deuotions to the gods for reuenge, and to the ghosts to manifest his grief, he accustomed himself to walke in that desolate coppesse of wood, where sighing, he recounted the vnkindnes of his prince, the wretchednes of his thoughts and life, melting away in such melancholie, as the trees were amased to beholde it, and the rockes wept their springs to heare it, as the Poet saith, on a desolate and leauelesse oake he wrote this:

Thine age and wastfull tempests thee,
Mine age and wretched sorrowes me
defaced,
Tby sap by course of time is blent,
My sence by care and age is spent and chased,
Thy leaues are fallen away to dust,
My yeares are thrallid by time vnust.
Tby bougbes the windes haue borne away,
My babes fierce murther did decay.
Tby rootes are firmed in the ground,
My rootes are rent, my comforts drownd,
showers cherishe
Tby barren bosome in the field,
I perish.
Since nothing may me comfort yelde.

*Storms, showers, age, weare, waste, daunt, and make thee dry
Teares, cares, age, ice, waste, wring, and yet liue I.*

In these melancholies leue we the desolate duke of Volgradia, till occasion be ministred to remember him, and return we to Margarita and her louer. Arsadacbus reliant nowe in Mosco, whom Protomachus by reason of the forepassed tragedies, thought to refresh with some pleasant triumphs: for which cause he proclaimed a iusts throughout all the empire, assembling al the Dukes, Lords, and gouernours of his prouinces, to dignifie the open court he meant to keepe. Thither also repaired all the faire ladies of Moscouia; among the rest Margarita as one of most reckoning, made not the least expence, for whatsoeuer, either to dignifie hir person, or to set out her beautie, or to present her beloued, could either be bought from India, traffiked in Europe, or marchanded in Asia, was sought out, and especially against the day of the tilt, and turny, at which time, like a second Diana, hauing her goldilocks tied vp with loose chaines of gold, and Diamondes, her bodie appareled in cloth of siluer, (ouer which she had cast a vaile of blacke and golden tinsell, through which her beautie appeared as doth the bright Phæbus in a summers morning: leauing our Hemisphere our faire Hecate, chasing away balefull darkenesse with her bright beames) shee was mounted on a high arch of triumph couered with cloth of golde: neare vnto her sate her olde father in his soueraigne maiestie; about her a hundredth damselles in white cloth of tissue, ouer-cast with a vaile of purple and greene silke loosly wouen, carrying gold and siluer censors in their hands, from whence issued most pleasant odours, such as in the pride of the yeare breath along the coast of Arabia Fælix or drops from the balmie trees of the East.

Thus seated, the Challengers with their seuerall deuises entred the tilt-yard, each striuing so excede other in expence and excellency; whose trumpets cheered the aire with their melodie. After these the Defendants entred; among whom Arsadachus was chiefe, whose pomp in that, exceeded al others I haue seene, and the other are ordinarily matched in our Courts of christendome, I will set downe vnto you. First, before the triumph entred the tilt-yard, there was a whole volie of a hundred cannons shot off; the noise whereof somewhat appeased, a hundred knights hauing their horse, armes, crests, fethers, and each part of them couered with greene cloth of golde, with lances of siluer, trotted about the yard, making their steedes keepe footing, according to the melodious sound of an orbe, which by cunning of man, and wonderfull art was brought into the presence of the prince. which whilst it continually turned, presented all the shapes of the twelve signes dauncing as it were to the harmonie, which the inclosed musicke presented them. After these marched a hundred pages apparelled in white cloth of siluer with crownets of siluer on their heads, leading each of them in their right hands, a braue courser trapped in a caparison purple and gold; in their left, a scutchion with the image of the princesse in the same. After these Arsadacbus in his triumphant chariot drawen by foure white vnicornes entred the tilt-yard, vnder his seate the image of fortune, which he seemed to spurne, with this posie, Quid hæc? on his right hand enuy, whom he frowned on by hir this posie, Nec hæc; on his left hand the portraiture of Cupid, by whome was written this posie, Si hic; ouer his head the picture of Margarita with this mot, Sola hæc. These armes were of beaten golde far more curious then those that Thetis gaue hir Acbilles before Troy, or Meriones bestowed on Vlysses when he assaulted Rbesus, being full of flames and half moones of saphires, chrisolites, and diamonds. In his helme he bare his mistresse fauour, which was a sleeue of salamanders skinne richly perfumed, and set with rubies. In this sort he presented him before the Emperour and his daughter, who was not alittle tickled with delight to behold the excellencie of his triumph. The trumpets were sounded, and the Judges seated, Arsadachus mounted himselfe on a second Bucephalus, and taking a strong lance ouerbore Stilconos the earle of Garauia, breaking his arme in the fall; in the second encounter he ouerthrew Asaphus of Tamiræ horse and man, neither ceased hee till 20. of the brauest men at armes were vnhorshed by his hardinesse. All this while with blushes and sweete smiles Margarita fauored euery incounterie, seeming with the egernesse of eie to breake euery push of the lance that leuelled at Arsadachus. His races being at end, Plicotus of Macarab entred the lists, who behaued himselfe like a braue prince, conquering as much with the sword, as the other with the lance: in this sort, this day, the next, and that which followed were ouerpast, wherein Arsadach. made euident proofes of great hope: so that Protomachus at the last cried out to his other princes; See ye Moscouites the hope of the empire, whose endings if they prooue answerable to his beginnings, Europe may perhappes wonder, but never equall.

The third day being ended, and the honours bestowed on them that best deserued them: the emperor in the chiefest of the festiuall caused the tables to be remoued, and the musicke to be called for; thinking by this meanes to giue loue more fuell, in hope it should burne more brighter: whereupon the princes betooke them to daunce; and Arsadachus as chiefe, led Margarita the measures. And after the first pawse began thus with her; Princesse said he, by what means might loue be discouered if speech were not? By the eies (my lord said she) which are the keys of desire, which both open the way for loue to enter, and locke him vp when he is let in. Howe hap then (said he) that Cupid among the poets is fained blinde? In that (my lord quoth she) he was maskt to poets memorie; and you know that falcons against they flie, are hooded, to make them more fierce and clearer sighted, and so perhaps was loue, which was blindfold at first (in the opinion of Poets) who neuer could see him rightly vntill they felt his eie in their hearts. Why sticketh he his eie in their hearts? I had thought (madam) it had beene his arrow said Arsadabus. Why his eies are his arrowes, quoth the princesse, (or I mistake his shooting;) for the last time he leuelled at mee he hit me with a looke. I beshrew him (saide the Prince) and then sounded the next measure, when Arsadabus continued his discourse in this manner: Madam, if loue wound by the eie, how healeth he? By the eie (my lord said she) hauing the propertie of Achilles sword to quell and recure. Then gracious lady quoth the prince, since loue hath wounded mee by your lookes, let them recouer mee, otherwise shall I blame both loues cruelletie, and your iudgement. Margarita replied thus: Great prince, if mine eies haue procured your offence, I will plucke them out for their follie; and if loue haue shot them for his shafts I beshrew him, for the last time they lookt on you, they left my heart in you. In me mistris quoth Arsadabus? Yea in you my lord quoth Margarita. Can you then liue heartlesse (said the prince?) Yea since hopelesse replied shee. This saide, the musicke cut off their merry talke; and the sodaine disease of the Emperour brake vp the pastimes. Whervpon euery prince and peere, lord and knight, taking leaue of their mistresses, betooke them to their rest. Onely Margarita, in whose bosome loue sate enthroned, in whose heart affections kept their watch, being laide in her bed, fared like Orlando sleeping in that bed his Angelica had lien with Medor, each feather was a fur bush; now turned

she, now tossed she, now groueling on her face, now bolt vpright, hammering ten thousand fancies in her head; at last, breaking out into a bitter sigh she beganne thus: Alas vnkind loue, that seasonest thy delights with delaies. Why giuest thou not poore ladies as great patience to endure, as penance in their durance? why are not thy affections like the figges of India, which are both grafted and greene of themselues, and no sooner sprung to a blossome, but spread in the bud? Why giuest thou Time swift wings to beginne thee, and so long and slowe ere hee seaze thee? I beseech thee loue, oh how she sighed when shee besought him! proine thou the wings of Time, lest he punish me, for thy delay is so great that my disease is vnsufferable: alas poore wretch that I am why prate, I to loue? or pray I for relief, being assured that the beginning of loues knowledge is the ending of humane reason; loue is a passion that may not be expressed, conceiued beyond conceit, and extinguished beside custome; stay thy minde therefore foolish Margarita, for it beganne first in thee beyond expectation, and must end in thee beyond hope: for, as there are no reasons but nature to prooue why the swanne hateth the sparrow, the eagle the Trochilus, the asse the bee, and the serpent the hogge; so likewise in loue there can no cause but nature be alleadged either of his sodaine flourish or vehement fall, his speedie waxing and slow waining: Temper thy selfe therefore, though loue tempt thee, and waite thine oportunitie: for the wanton if you fawne on him, will flie you; and setting light by him, will leape vpon you. Fond that I am, why talke I thus idly, seeming with the prating souldiour to discourse of the fortresse I haue neuer conquered, and of the fancies I shall neuer compasse? Why doth not Arsadachus smile on mee? as who knoweth not that the aspis tickleth when she pricketh; and poisons that are delightfull in the swallow, are deadly in the stomach? why hath he not courted me these fiew moneths? fond that I am, the more neare am I to my fall; for as the philosopher saith, men are like to the poison of scorpions, for as the sting of the one killeth in three dayes, so the pride and crueltie of the other quelleth a kinde heart in lesse then a moment. Woe is me, I had rather neede Philoxenus to cure me of loue by his laies, then Anippus to continue loue in me: better were it for me to heare Tripaneder play then Arsadachus preach.

In these thoughts and this speech loue sealed vp her eies till on the morrow; but what she dreamed I leaue that to you Ladies to decide, who hauing dallied with loue, haue likewise beene acquainted with his dreames. On the morrow, the day being farre spent, and the court replenished with attendants, Margarita arose, and scarcely was shee attired, but that a messenger came vnto her in the behalfe of the earle Asaphus, beseeching her presence to grace his feast that day, for that he had entertained and inuited Arsadachus and the best princes and ladies in Court, by the Emperours consent, to make a merry festiuall; whereunto Margarita quickly condescended, and thought euery houre two till noonetide; at which time roiallly attended, she repaired to Asaphus house, where were assembled, of princes, Arsadachus, Plicorus, and Stilconos; of ladies, beside her selfe, Calandra, Ephania, and Gerenia: all these Asaphus entertained heartily, placing them according to their degrees, and feasted them with as great pompe and pleasure as he could imagine.

But when he perceiued their appetites quelled with delights, their eares cloyed with musicke, and their eies filled with beholding, he being a Prince of high spirit, began thus: Princes and Ladies, I haue inuited you to my house, not to entertaine you with the pompe of Persia, or the feast of Heliogabalus, but to dine you according to the directiō of the phisitions, which is to let you rise with an appetite, which both whetteth your memories and helpeth your stomaches; and for that the after banquet may as well please your humors, as the former appeased your hunger, I must beseeke you to rise frō this place, and repaire vnto another, where because the weather is hot, and the time vnfitt for exercise, we will spende the time in pleasant discourse, feeding our fancies with pleasant talke, as we haue feasted our fast with curious cates. To this motion all the assembly easily consented, in that for the most part, they had bin buzzing in their eares, and baiting their harts, whereupon he brought them into a faire arbor, couered with Roses, and honisuckles, paued with Camamile, pinkes, and violets, garded with two pretie christall fountaines on euerie side, which made the place more coole, and the soyle more fruitfull. They all being entred this arbor, Asaphus being both learned and pleasant witted, began thus. My ghests said he (for name of Princes I haue sent them lately vnto pallaces) now let each of you bethinke him of mirth not of maiestie, I will haue no stoicall humor in this arbour, but all shall be either louers, or loues wel-willers, and for that, each of vs may bee more apt to talk of Venus; we wil taste of her frend Bacchus; for a draught of good wine, (if Lamprias in Plutarcb, may be beleeuued) whettes the conceits, and he when he had drunke most, debated best: Aschilus therefore ere he had dipped his penne in the inke to write tragedies, diued into the bottome of a wine pot to find termes; for as, where the wolfe hath bitten most soundest, the flesh is most sweetest, so wheras wine hath warmed most hotely, the tongue is armed most eloquently, I therefore carowse to you my familiars, and as I giue you licour to warme, so will I crowne you with ioy and roses to alay: then haue at loue who list, for me thinks I am alreadie prepared for him: This said he drunke vnto them, and all the rest gave him the pledge, and being crowned after the manner of the philosophicall banquets, they sate downe. And Arsadacbus spake thus: Asaphus I haue heard that the motion is vaine, vnlesse the action follow, and delights that are talked of before such as like them, except they grow in force, breede more discontent in their want, then pleasure in their report: as therefore you haue hanged out the Iuie bush, so bring forth the wine, as you haue prefixt the garland, so begin the race, as you intimated delight, so bring it to entrance. Asaphus smiling replied thus: Do then all these Ladies and braue louers giue me the honour and direction to gouern these sports? They do, said Margarita: Then sit aside quoth he and giue place to your commander; whereupon all the assembly laughed, and Asaphus smilingly sate downe in the highest roome, placing the Ladies opposite against their louers, and himselfe seated in his soueraintie, began thus: Since in bankets the place is not to be giuen for the maiestie, but the mirth, be not displeased though I preferre my selfe (my subiects,) since I know this, that I haue crothets in my head, when I haue tasted the cup, and no man is more apt to talke then I when I haue traffiked with good wine, and were it not so, you had no cause to waxe wroth with my presumption, for as the mason preferreth not the attique stones in his building for nobilitie, neither the painter his precious colours in limning, for their liuelines, neither the shipwright his Cretan cedar in framing for the sweetenesse: so in fes-tialles the ghests are not to be placed, according to the degrees, but their dispositions, for their liuelynesse, not their liuelyhoods, for where pleasures are sought for, the person is smally regarded, which considered, I am iustified. But to our purpose, since loue is the affection that leadeth vs, at him we will leuill our fancies, can-uasing this question amongst vs, whether hee so best worketh, by the eie, the touch, or the eare, for of the fие sences, I thinke these three are most forcible. Nowe therefore wee will and command you, our masculine subiects, said Asaphus, to beginne to our feminine Philosophers, and since you Arsadachus are of greatest hope, incipe. After they had all laughed heartily at the maesticall vtterance of Asaphus, and his imperious manner, the yong Cuscan saide thus: The Thebians in time past, who confined vpon Pontus, begat such chil-dren, who when they beheld their parents killed them by their lookes, as it fared with them, so falleth it out with me, who bethinking my selfe of those thoughtes, which I haue conceiued in respect of loue, am con-founded in thinking of them, such power hath fancie, where it hath hold-fast. I must therefore as they quelled the one, kill the other, or I shall die by thoughts as they did by lookes: but since to die for loue is no death but delight, I will aduenture to thinke, talke, and discourse of him, and rather perish my selfe, then suffer these pas-times to be vnperformed. Our question is of loue faire ladies, whereat you blush when I speake, and I bowe when I thinke, for he giueth me words to discourse, and courage to decide; for as Plato saith, loue is audacious in all things, and forward in attempting any thing: hee yeeldeth speech to the silent, and courage to the bashfull, hee giueth industrie to the negligent, and forwardnes to the sluggard, making a courtier of a clowne; and lighting on a currish Minippus, hee softeneth him as iron in the fire, and maketh him a courtly Aristippus vnder his safeconduct; therefore I will talke of him, and with your patience I will satisfie you, that loue hath soonest entrance by the eie, and greatest sustenance by the sight; for sight whereas it is stirred vp by many motions, with that spirit which it darteth out from it self, doth likewise disperse a certaine miraculous fierie force, by which meane we both doe and suffer many things: and as among all the senses, the eie extendeth his power furthest, so is his working most forcible; for as the clay petrot draweth fire, so the lookes do gather affection. And that the forcible working of the eie may be prooued to exceed all other the senses, what reason can be greater, since according to euery affection of the heart or distemperature of the minde, the radiations of the eie are correspondent; if the heart be enuious, the lookes dart out beames of fierce enuie, as may be considered by that of Entelidas in Plutarch:

*Quondam pulcher erat crinibus Entelidas,
Sed sese ipse videns placidis in fluminis vndis:
Liuore infamis perdidit inuidiae,
Facinus attraxit morbum, formamque perdidit.*

For it is reported that this Entelidas taking a delight in his owne liuely beauty, and beholding the same in a spring, grew in enuy against the same; and by that meanes fell into a sickenesse, whereby he lost both health and beautie. Narcissus, neither by taste, nor the ministerie of speech, nor the office of scent affected his owne forme, but his sight bereft him of his senses, and the eie drew fancie to the heart; for this cause the poets call Ladies eies Cupids coach, the beames his arrowes; placing all his triumph and power in them as the chiefest instrument of his seigniorie, and that the eie only beside the ministerie of other senses, procureth loue, you may perceiue by these examples following. Xerxes, who despising the sea, and scorning the land found out new meanes to nauigate, and armies to choake the earth, yet fell in loue with a tree; for hauing seene a plantane in Lydia of huge greatnessse, he staied vnder it a hote day, making him a shelter of his shadow, a louer of his loues; and afterwardes departing from the same, he adorned it with collars of golde and iewelles, as if that that tree had beene his enamoured, ouer which he appointed a guardian to assist it, fearing lest any should doe violence vnto the branches thereof. And what (I pray you) moued this affection in Xerxes but the eie? A noble yong man of Atbens loued so much the stature of good fortune erected neere vnto the Prytaneum, that he embrased it, and kissed it, and offered a great summe of money to the Senate to redeeme the same, and not attaining his suite, hee slew himselfe; and what wrought this in this noble yong man but the eie? for this marble image had neither sent to delight the sent, speach to affect the eare, nor other meanes to moue affection; it was then the sole force of the eie which conducteth to the heart each impression, and fixeth each fancie in the same: what resteth there then but to giue the honor to the eie? which as it is the best part in a woman, so hath it the most force in loue. Soft (saide Plicotus) claime not the triumph before you heare the triall; for if vertue and the whole praise thereof (as the philosophers say) consisteth in act, let the touch haue the first place, and the eie the second; for looks doe but kindle the flame, where the touch both maketh it burne, and when it listeth, quencheth the furie. Such as beholde Anter are healed of the falling sickenesse (saieth Arsadacbus) and they that sleepe vnder Sinilan at such time as the plant swelleth and beareth his floure, are slaine. Quoth Plicotus, saffron flores procure sleepe, the Amethyst staieth drunkennesse, by which reasons you ought to ascribe as much power to the scent as to the sight. But heare me, you detracters from the touch; the hearb Alissus taken in the hand, driues sighes from the heart. Yea but (said Arsadacbus) the mad elephant beholding the raine groweth wilde. Yea but the wilde bull tied to the figge tree, and tasting thereof is no more wrathful (said Plicotus) ascribe therefore to the touch farre more then the sight; heape all the argument that can be for the eies, it breedeth the sickenesse: but wee rather commend the hearbe that purgeth the disease, then the humour that feedeth it, the salue that healeth the wound, than the corrosive that grieueth it, the floure that comforteth the braine, and not that which cloyeth the same: the touch therefore in loue should haue the prerogatiue which both reareth it, and restraineth it; and that the touch hath greater power then the sight, what greater reason may be alleadged then this, that we only see to desire, especially to touch? the furniture of all delight is the taste, and the purgatorie in loue, is to touch, and want power to execute the affection, as may appeare by this example. In the dayes

of Apollonius Tiancus, who by euery man was held for the fountaine of wisedome, there was an eunuch found out in Babylon who had vnlawfully conuersed with a paramour of the Kings; for which cause the king demaunded of Apollonius what punishment the eunuch ought to haue for that his rash and bold enterprise: no other answered Apollonius saue that he liue to behold and touch without further attempt. With which answere the king being amazed, demaunded why he gaue this answer. To whome Apollonius replied; Doubt not you, O king, but that loue thall make him feele exceeding paines and martirdomes; and like a simple flie, he shall play so long with the flame vntill he fall to cinders. And for further prooфе the Egyptians (as Ororius reporteth) when as they would represent loue do make a net: and the Phenitians describe him in a hand laide in fire, approuing them by the touch which of all senses suffereth most, and hath greatest power in the bodie. Asaphus that was still all this while, sodainely brake off the discourse, saying thus: What sense (I pray you) was that (ye philosophers) that perswaded Ariston of Ephesus to lie with an asse, and to beget a daughter, which was afterwards called Onoselino? what sense had Tullius Stellus to be in loue with a mare, of whome he begat a faire daughter which was called Sponano? what made Cratis the Iloritane shepheard to loue a goate? Pasiphae to fancie a bull? Stilconos hearing that question, replied thus: Truely a senslesse desire, which hauing no power of loue but instinct of life, ought neither to be mentioned by modest tongues, nor vttered in chaste hearing: that loue which is gathered by the eie, and grounded in the heart, which springeth on the vniiformitie of affection, hauing in it selfe al the principlas of musike

(as Theophrastus saith) as griefe, pleasure, and diuine instruct that loue which the Græcians call Ghiciprion, which is as much to say as bitter sweete; of that we talke, and no other, which sacred affection I haue both tasted with the eie, and tried by the touch, and haue found so many effects in both, that as the sea ebbes and flowes by the motion of the moone; the Tropi of Egypt waxe and waine according to the flouds, and fall of Nilus, so haue I by smiles, and louers pleasures, and repulses, found such a taste in loue, that did not the eare claim some greater preheminence, I should subscribe to you both: but as loue beginneth by the sight, and hath pleasure in the touch, so gathereth he his eternitie from hearing, by hearing Cupid a boy, is made Cupid a god, by hearing Cupid scarce fligd gathereth store of feathers; for euen as breath extinguisheth fire in the beginning, but when it is increased, both nourisheth and strengtheneth it, so loue that is couered in embers by the aire, and scarce enabled and fashioned by the touch, is angrie with those that discouer him; but when he flies abroad, and braggeth in his wrings, he is fedde with sweete wordes and laughes, at pleasant languish if he faint, kinde wordes do releue him; if he be sicke, perswasions purge him; if hee misdeeme, reasons recouer him; in briefe, by the eare loue sucketh, by the eare loue thriueth, and by the eare all his essence is fashioned: and for that cause Melpomene and Terpsicore the Muses are gouernours of our hearing, whereas not any muse or godhead hath any affectiō to the eie or touch: for delight and gladnesse in loue proceedeth from eloquent perswasion, which receiued by the eare, changeth, moueth, altereth and gouerneth all the passions of the heart. Margarita blushing in that her turne was next, draue Stilconos out of his text in this sort: My lord (saide shee) if loue were gathered by the eare, olde men for their wise discourses shoulde winne more credite then yong men for their worthy comlines; or if by the touch, loue had his triall, the diuinitie of loue would be wronged by too much inhumanitie. It must be the eie then which can discern the rude colt from the trained steed, the true diamond from the counterfet glasse, the right colour from the rude, and the perfect beautie from the imperfect behauour: had not the eie the prerogatiue, loue shoulde bee a monster, no myracle: and were the touch only iudge, the soft Ermine for daintinesse, the Seale for his softnesse, the Marterne for his smoothe sweetenesse, would exceede both Ladie's best perfections, and the finest skinne of the choicest louer. If by the eare loue were discerned, the Syren by her sweet song should winne more fauour then Sibilla for hir science, and the flatterer should be held for the best fauourite: let the eie therfore haue the prerogatiue, which is both curious to beholde, and emperious to conquer. By it the heart may discouer his affections as well as fine phrases, and more sweete hath oftentimes beene gathered by a smile then a touch: for by the one, we gather a hope of succeeding pleasure, by the other, a ioy in suspect for feare we be deceiued, which beginneth in a minute and endeth in a moment. All cattes are grey in the darke (said Calandra) and therefore (good madam) you doe well to preferre the eie. Yea but said Epbania, the eie had neede of a candle to light it, or else (perhaps) the fatte were in the fire. Well (said Gerenia) I will trust mine eare then: for where neither the eie seeth, nor the touch feeleth, certaintely by darke let me heare the words, for they are the tell-troths. Ah Gerenia (said Stilconos) trust them not, for they that are false for the most part by day, wil (perappes) faile you in the night. Leaue your talke (quoth Asaphus) and shut mee all these three sences in one, and then tell me the felicitie; when the eie shall giue earnest of the heart, the heart take comfort by the eare, the wordes we haue heard, and the sights wee haue seene confirmed by touch, this is the loue I had rather haue in mine armes then heare it in this place discoursed by argument. Since therefore (my subiects) you are at my obeisance, and vpon my direction are to doe homage to loue, I giue you free licence to discourse, free libertie to looke, the sweetes whereof, after you haue gathered, come to me, and after the priest hath hand-fasted you, come touch and spare not, you shall haue my pattent to take your pleasure. It is a dangerous matter (said Arsadabus) to enter those lists where women will do what they list. Wel (saide Margarita) diuels are not so blacke as they be painted (my Lorde) nor women so wayward as they seeme. A good earnest peny (quoth Asaphus) if you like the assurance. With that they brake vp the assembly, for it was supper time, and the prince intreated them to sit downe, where they merrily passed the time, laughing heartily at the pleasant and honest mirth wherein they had passed that afternoone.

The supper ended, each louer tooke his mistres apart, where they handled the matter in such sort, that Margarita which was before but easily fired, now at last grew altogether inflamed, for the night calling them thence, and the companie taking their leaue, she with a bitter sigh and earnest blush, tooke her leaue of Arsadabus thus: My Lord said she, if time lost bee hardly recouered, and fauours wonne are to be followed, haue a care of your estate, who may bragge of that fortune that no one in Mosco can equall: which saide, she in all her periode of sighes ending as abruptly as she had begun, and so departed. Arsadachus that knew the tree by the fruit, the cloth by the list, the apple by the tast, fained not to see what he most perceiued, and taking his leaue of Asaphus departed to his lodging where in a carelesse vaine, as if cloking and smothering with loue, he wrote these verses,

Judge not my thoughts, ne measure my desires,
By outward conduct of my searching eies,
For starres resemble flames, yet are no fires:
If under gold a secret poison lies,
If under softest flowers lie Serpents fell,
If from mans spine bone Vipers do arise,
So may sweete lookes conceale a secret bell,
Not loue in me, that neuer may suffice
The heart that bath the rules of reason knowne,
But loue in me which no man can devise,
A loue of that I want, and is mine owne,
Yet loue, and louers lawes do I despise:
How strange is this? iudge you that louers be,
To loue, yet haue no loue conceald in me.

And other he wrote in this manner, which came to the hands of his mistris, who prettilie replied; both which I haue vnderwritten.

I smile to see the toies,
Which I in silent see,
The hopes, the secret ioyes,
Expected are from me:
The vowes, the sighes, the teares, are lost in vaine,
By silly loue tbrough sorrow welnie slaine..

*The colour goes and comes,
The face, now pale, now red,
Now feare the heart benomes,
And hope growes almost dead.
And I looke on and laugh, tho sad I seeme,
And faine to fawne altho my minde misdeeme.*

*I let the flie disport,
About the burning light,
And feede her with resort,
And baite her with delight.
But when the flames hath seasd her winges (adew)
Away will I, and seeke for pleasures new.*

*Smile not, they are no toyes, Whiche you in silent see.
Nor hopes, nor secret ioyes,
Whiche you beholde in mee:
But those my vowes, sighes, teares, are serious seales,
Wherby my heart his inward grieve reueales.*

*My colour goes and comes,
My face is pale and red,
And feare my heart benomes,
And hope is almost dead:
And why? to see thee laugh at my desart
So faire a man, and yet so false a heart.*

*Well, let the flie disport,
And turne her in the light:
And as thou dost report,
Still baite her with dispite:
Yet be thou sure, when thou hast slaine the furst,
Thou fliest away (perhaps) to find the worst.*

Thus passed the affaires in Mosco til such time as the emperour growing more and more in sicknes; by the consent of his nobles, hasted on the marriage. The rumor whereof being spread abroad, made euery one reioice; but among the rest, Margarita triumphed, who called into open assembly by the Emperour, was betrothed to Arsadachus in the presence of the nobilitie, who by his lowring lookes at that time, shewed his discontents; yet will he, nill he, the day was appointed, the sixteenth of the Calends of March, next insuing: against which time there were high preparations in Court, and throughout all the prouinces for pastimes. But since it is a most true axiome among the Philosophers, that whereas be many errors, there likewise must needs follow many offences: it must needly follow, that since Arsadachus was so fraught with corrupt thought, hee should practise and performe no lesse vngratiuous corrupt and vngodly actions, for no sooner was hee departed from the presence of the Emperour, but he presently beganne to imagine how to breake off his nuptialls, forcing in himselfe a forgetfulness of Margaritaes vertues, her loue and good deserts, so that it may euidently be perceiued and approued that which Ammonius saith, that things concluded in necessitie are dissolued by violence, and truely not without reason was loue compared to the sunne, for as the sun thrusteth forth his purer and warmer beams through darknes and the thickest cloude, so loue pierceth the most indurate heartes, and as the sunne is sometime inflamed, so likewise is vnstable loue quicklie kindled. Moreouer, as the constitution of that body which vseth no exercise endureth not the sunne, so likewise an illiterate and corrupt mind cannot entertaine loue, for both of them after the same manner are disturbed from their estates, and attainted with sicknes, blaming not the force of loue, but their owne weakenesse. But this difference is betweene loue and the sunne, for that the sunne sheweth both faire and foule things to those that looke on vpon the earth: loue onelie taketh care of the beautie of faire things, and onely fixeth the eies vpon such things, enforcing vs to let slip all other. By this may be gathered that Arsadacbus being vicious coulde not iustly be attainted with loue, but with some slight passion, such as affect the greatest tyrants in beholding the pittifull massacre of the innocent, as shal manifestly appeare by the sequele: for after long debating in his restlesse minde, somtime to flie the court, and by that meanes to escape the bondage which he supposed was in wedlocke; sometime to make the princes away by poison, ridding himselfe thereby of suspect, and Artosogon of hope. Fortune is as well the patronesse of iuiuries, as the protector of iustice, the scourge of the innocent, as the faouurer of the nocent, who is rightly blind in hauing no choice, and worthily held for bedlam, in that she respecteth no deserts, so smiled on him that in depth of his doubts a remedy was ministred him beyond his imagination, which fell out after this maner. Artosogon his father being so tired with yeares, as he must of force yeeld speedie tribute to death; so loaden with sicknesse that he seemed welnie past all succours, bethinking him of his succession, and like a kind father, desirous (before his death) to beholde his sonne, not without the earnest entreaty of the empresse, and his nobility, sent present messengers to Mosco, beseeching the emperour Protomacbus presently to dispatch Arsadacbus vnto him, assuring him of the perilous estate of his life, and the desire he had to stablish his son before his death: for wherfore the emperour of Mosco (though loathly) dismissed his pretended triumphs, and gaue Arsadachus licence to depart for Cusco.

The vngodly yong prince seeing his purposes fall out so happily, sacrificed to Nemesis, clearing his browes of those cares wherewith discontent had fraught them: and hauing with all expedition furnished himselfe to depart, hee thought good to cast a faire foile on his false heart, to colour his corrupt thoughts with comfortlesse throbbes; and comming to Margarita, (who was almost dead to heare the tidings) with a fained look and false heart he thus attempted her. Madam were I not assisted with my sighes, and succored by my teares, to disburthen the torments of my heart, I feare me it shoulde euen now burst, it is so fraught with bitternes, Alas I must now leaue you, being the bark to the tree, the blossome to the stalk, the sent to the flower, the life to the bodie, the substance to the shadow; I must now leaue you being the beutiful whom I honor, the chast whom I adore, and the goddesse of al my glorie; I must now leaue you to liue in sorrow without comfort, in dispaire without solace, in tears without rescouse, in pains without ceasing; I must now leaue you as the dam her yong kid, the ew her deare lambkin, the nightingale her prettiest nestling, fearing lest the cuckow hatch those chickens which I haue bred, the Callax bring vp those yong fish I haue got, and forren eies feed on those beuties which only fasten life in me: Ah Margarita, so faire, as none so faire, more vertuous then vertue her selfe; if these troubles attaint me, in what temper shal I leaue you, being the mirror of beauty, and euen the miracle of constancie? me thinkes I see those iniurious, though faire hands, beating those delicate brests, these eies surffeting with tears, these lips with blasting their roses with sighings: but (ah deere lady) let not such follies be your familiars; for as the thorne pricking the dead image in waxe pierceth the liuely substance indeede, so euerie light filip you giue this breast, will fell this bodie, every light teare that trickleth from these eies, wil melt me to water, the least sighs steaming frō these lippes, will stifle me, haue therefore patience (sweete ladie) and gourne your passions with discretion; for as the smallest kernell (in time) maketh the tallest tree; so (in time) these shadowes of sorrow shall turne to the substance of delight: yea in short time my returne shall make you more happy then my present departe nowe maketh you heauy. With these words Arsadachus was ready to take his leaue. When Margarita presaging the mischiefe that was to follow; casting her armes about his necke, gaue him this sorrowfull adue.

Since my misgiuing mind assureth me of my succeeding harme: ah suffer me (sweet prince) to embrace that which I neuer heereafter shall beholde and looke vpon; that with my weeping eies which is the cause of all my wastefull enuies: Ah my soule, must thou leaue me when wert wholy incorporate in this bodie? Ah my heart, must thou forsake mee to harbour in this happy bosome? What then shall remaine with me to keep me in life, but my sorow? being the bequest of misery shal assist me in my melancholy: ah deare Arsadachus since thou must leaue me, remember thou leauest me without soule, remember thou leauest me heartlesse: yea I woulde to the gods thou mightst leaue me lifelesse, for then disburthened of this body, I might in soule accom-panie thee, vnitig our partes of fire: since our fleshly persons must be parted, farewell (deare Lord) farewell, euer deare Lord, but I beseech thee, not for euer (deare Lord) remember thou hast conquered, and art to triumph, thou hast gotten the goale, and art to reap the garland; thou hast taken the captiue, and maiest enjoy the ransome: hie thee therefore, oh hie thee lest heavnnesse ouerbeare me; returne to her that shall liue in terrour till thou returne. But if some angrie fates, some vntowarde fortune, some sinister planet detaine thee, and with thee, my soule, heart, life and loue; now now, oh now ye destinies, end me. This said, she fell in a swowne, and her Ladies coulde hardly recouer life in her. Meane while (by the direction of the emperor) who heard her impatience, Arsadachus was called away, to whom Protomachus presented many gifts, swearing him in solemne manner before the whole assembly of his nobilitie, to make a speedy returne to Mosco, to accomplish the marriage. In the meane time Margarita was reuiued, who seeing her Arsadachus absent, demeaned her selfe in the most pitifull manner that euer poore lamentable Ladie did: at last remembiring her of a rich iewell which Arsinous had given her, which was a pretious box set with emeraulds, the which at such time as he gaue it her, hee charged her to keepe vntill such time as he she loued best should depart from her; she sent the same for a present to Arsadachus, beseeching him as he loued her, neuer to open the same boxe vntill such time as he beganne in any sort to forget her (for such counsell Arsinous had giuen her.) This present was deliuered the prince when he mounted on horse, who promised carefully to keepe it; and with his retinue rode on his way towards Cusco: where we leauie him to returne to Margarita, who no sooner heard of the departure of Arsadachus, but laying apart her costly iewels, her rich raiment, and princely pleasures, closed herself vp in a melancholy tower, which through the huge height thereof beheld the countrey farre and neere: on the top whereof, each houre she diligently watched for the returne of her beloued Arsadachus. Her lodging was hangd about with a cloth of black velvet embroidered about with dispaires; before her bed hung the picture of her beloued: to which she often discoursed her vnkindnesse conceiued, offering drops of her blood daily to the deafe image; such a fondling is loue, when he groweth too fierie, no day, no night passed her, wherein she spent not many houres in teares, and many teares euery houre, neither could the authoritie of her father, the perswasions of his counsaile, nor the intreatings of her attendants, alter her resolution.

In which melancholie a while I will leauue her to discourse the damned treasons of Arsadachus, who arriuing at last in Cusco, after long iourneis was after many hearty welcomes conducted to his father, who receiued such sodaine ioy at the sight of him, that he recouered strength, and cast off his sickenesse; so that calling his nobilitie vnto him, hee ordained a time wherein Arsadachus should be inuested in the empire, publishing the same through al his prouinces. In the meane time with much mirth and festiuell, the yoong Prince liued in his fathers court, deereley tendered by the empresse Lelia his mother, and duely attended by the best of the nobilitie, among whom Argias the duke of Morauias, being a prince of deepe reach, and of great reuenues, following the custome of such who desire to grow in fauour with Princes, entertained Arsadachus with huge feasts and bankets: and among the rest, with one most especiall, wherein as he had imploied al whatsoeuer the country could afford to delight the tast, so spared he no cost to breed pastime and triumph. Among all other, after the supper was solemnized, he brought in a maske of the goddesses, wherein his daughter (being the mirrour and the Aperse of the whole world for beautie) was apparelled like Diana, her haire scattered about her shoulders, compassed with a siluer crownet, her necke decked with carkanets of pearle, her daintie body was couered with a vaile of white net-work wrought with wiers of siluer, and set with pearle, where through the milke white beauties of the sweete Saint gaue so heauenly a reflexion, that it was sufficient to make Saturne merry and mad with loue, to fixe his eie on them: among all the rest that had both their partes of perfection and beautie, and great louers to like the, Arsadabus made choise of this Diana (who not onely resembled her in that shew, but indeed was called by the name of Diana) on whose face when he had fixed his eies, he grew so inflamed as Montgibel yeeldeth not so much smoke as he sent out sighes: to be briefe, he grew so sodainely altered, that as such as beheld the head of Medus were altered from their shapes, so he that saw the heauen of these beauties, was rauished from his sences: to bee briefe, after he had danced the measures, passed the night, and was conducted by Argias and his attendants, hee tooke no rest, but tossing on his bed, grew so altered, that on the morrow all the court was amazed to behold his melancholies. It cannot be reported how strangely he demeaned himselfe, for his sleeps fled him, his colour changed, his speech vncertain, his apparel carelesse: which Argias perciuing as being maruellous politique, ministred oile to the lamp, fuel to the fire, flaxe to the flame, encreasing his daughters beautie with cost, and Arsadachus loue by her companie; for he ceased not to invite him, hoping that at the last the cloudes would breake out and raine him some good fortune. Diana was trained by him to the lewre, and taught her lesson with great cunning, who was as apt to execute as her father to counsell. Arsadachus one day among the rest finding the opportunitie, and desirous to discouer his conceits was stricken so dombe with her diuine beautie, as he could not disclose his minde. Whereupon calling for pen and inke, he wrote this, thrusting it in Dianaes bosome, walked melancholy into a faire garden on the backe side of *Argiae*s pallace, where he wept so bitterly, that it was supposed his heart would burst.

*I pine away expecting of the boure,
Whiche through my wairward chance will not arriue,
I waite the word, by whose sweete sacred power,
My lost contents may soone be made alive:
My pensiue heart, for feare my griefe shoud perish,
Vpon fallacious hope his fast appeaseth;
And to my selfe my frustrete thoughts to cherish,
I faine a good that flis before it ceaseth:
And as the ship farre scattered from the port,
All welnie spent and wreckt with wretched blast,
From East to West, midst surging seas is tossed,
So I, whose soule by fierce delaies effort,
Is ouercome in heart and lookes desast,
Runne beere, runne there, sigh, die, by sorrow crossed.*

Diana tooke no daies to peruse this ditty, but hauing ouerread it, gaue it her father to iudge of, who faining

a seueritie more then ordinarie, and glad of the opportunitie, entered the garden where the prince was welnie forespent with sorrow, and taking occasion to interrupt his meditations, he began thus: Most royall Prince, I thinke the heauens lowre on me, that labouring by al indeuours to procure your delights, I rather find you more melancholy by my motions, then merry by my entertainment: Alas my Lord, if either my actions do displease, my entertainement bee too bace, or if in anie thing I haue defaulted, wherein I may make amends, I beseech you let me know of you, and you shall finde such readines in me, your humble seruant, as no hasard, danger, or discommoditie whatsoeuer, shall drive me from the accomplishment of your pleasures and behests.

Arsadabus seeing Argias so plyant beganne to recover hope, whereupon fixing his eies vpon him a long while, at last he brake his mute silence thus: Argias, thy courtesie can not boade my discontents, for thy kindenesse is such as bindes me vnto thee, and breeds me no melancholie; and for I see thee so careful for my good, I will first therefore shew thee of what important, secrecie is, and declare vnto thee, those punishments antiquitie bestowed on those that reuealed secrets. Lastly vpon thy faithfull oth I may ventre further, but so as thy silence may make thee happiest man in Cosco. To be of faire words (Argias) becommeth a man of much vertue; and no small treasure findeth that Prince who hath a priuy and faithful secretarie, in whose bosome he may powre his thoughts, on whose wisedome hee may repose his secrets. Plutarch writeth that the Atbenians hauing warre with king Philip of Macedon, by chaunce lighted vpon certaine letters which he had written to Olimpias his wife, which they not onely sent backe sealed and vnsearched, but also said, that since they were bound by their laws to be secret, they would neither see nor reade other mēs priuate motions, Diodorus Siculus, writeth that among the Egyptians it was a criminal act, to open secrets which he proueth to be true, by example of a priest, who had vnlawfull companie with a virgin of the goddesse Isis, both which trusting their secrecie to another priest, and hee hauing little care to keepe their action concealed, sodainely cried out, where through the offenders were found out and slaine, and he banished. And where as the same priest complained against the vniust sentence, saying: that whatsoeuer he had reueled was in fauour of religion, he was answered by the Iudge, if thou alone hadst knowne it without being priuie to them, or hadst thou had notice without corrupt consent, thou shouldest haue reason to be aggreeued; but sodainely whereas they trusted their secrecie vnto thee which they had in hand, and thou promisedst them to keepe silence, hadst thou remembred thee of thy bond and promise, and the law which we haue to be secret in all things, thou hadst neuer had the courage to publish it. Plutarch in his booke of banishment saith, that an Athenian sought vnder the cloke of an Egyptian, asked him what hee carried hid, to whom he answered: Thou shewest thy selfe smally read and worse nurtered (O thou Athenian) sith thou perceiuest not that I carrie this hid for no other respect, but that I would haue no man know what I carrie, many other are the examples of Anaxileus, Dionisius, Plato, and Bias, which were too long for me to report, and too tedious for thee to heare, my onely desire is to let thee knowe the waight of secrecie, and the punishment that knowing the one and the other

(my Argias) thou mightst in respect of thy life keepe silence with the tongue.

Argias that knew the bird by the feather, and the eagle by the flight, the leopard by his spot, and the lyon by his claw, cut off his circumlocutions, with this discourse; Aristarchus the Philosopher (most noble prince) was wont to say, that by reason of their instabilitie, knew not that which the most men ought to desire, nor that which they should flie, because that euerie day changeth, and swift Time flieth: Eubeus the Philosopher, was wont many times to talke this at the table of great Alexander; by nature euerie one is prompt and sharpe witted, to giue counsell and to speake his opinion in other mens affaires, and fond and slow in his owne purposes. Truely this sentence was both graue and learned, for manie there be that are discreet in other mens causes, and iudge rightly, but among ten thousand there is not one that is not deceiued in his own causes. This considered, your grace doth most wisely, to seeke to disburden your thoughts in a secret bosome, and to aske counsell of another in your earnest occasions, for by the one you shall benefite your griefe, by the other conquer it. Histories report that the valiant captaine Nicias, was neuer mistaken in any thing which atchiued by another mans counsell, neither euer brought any thing to good effect, which he managed according to his owne opinion. It is therefore vertue in you (good prince) if in immitation of so great a Chieftaine, you rather trust other mens wisedome, then your owne wit: and since it pleaseth you to grace me with the hope of secrecie, your excellencie shall not to neede to misdoubt, for by all those gods whom I reuerence, by this right hand which I lay on thy honourable loines, so may my pastures be plentifull, my barnes filled, my vines burthened, as I vow to be secret, resolued to seale my faith with such assurance, as death it self shal neuer be able to dissolute it. Arsadacbus hearing his zealous promises, and weighing his wise answeres, by the one, assured himselfe of his loyaltie, by the other, gathered his great wisedome and learning; whereupon taking Argias by the hand, and withdrawing himselfe into a verie secrete and cloose arbour in the garden, hee, after hee had a while rested himselfe, and meditated on that he had to say, with a bitter sigh brake out into these speeches. Oh Argias, had the destinies made vs as prone to indure the assaults of loue, as they haue made vs prompt to delight in them, if they had fauoured vs with as much power to pacifie the furie of them, as they haue giuen vs will to persever in the follie, I could then be mine owne phisition, without discouering my griefe, and salue that with discretion, which I nowe sigh for through dispaire. But since they haue denied vs that grace in their secret wisedome, to haue wil to relieue our own weaknessse, purges to expulse our poysons, and constancie to endure loues conflicts, I must haue recourse vnto thee, in whom cōsisteth the source of all my safetie, beseeching thee (deare Argias) if thou hearest that thou shouldest not, consider that I suffer that I would not, and so temper my defects, by the force and effects of thy wisedome, that I may be relieved and thou nothing greeued. Thou knowest sweet friend the contract I haue past with Margarita, thou knowest the resolution of my father wholly bent to accomplish it, thou knowest the expedition is required to accomplish the mariage: al which shall no sooner be accomplished, but I shall perish, and that day I shall become the bride-

grome of Margarita, I wish to be buried in my graue: this is the first mischiefe must be anticipated, this the first sore must be salued, this the first consumption must haue a cordiall: Mightie prince said Argias, those conditions that consist on impossibilities may be broken, and marriage which by an inviolable law of nature was ordained to knit and vnite soules and bodies together, cannot be rightly solemnised betweene such, whose good likings haue not the same limits, whose affections are not vnited with selfe like faculties, for as to ioyne fire and water, moist and drie, were a matter impossible, especially in one subiect, and more, in that they be contraries; so to couple loue where there is hatred, affinitie where there is no fancie, is a matter against right, repugnant to reason, and such a thing as since nature doth impugne it, the gods if it be broken will easilie dispence withall, whereas therefore you are a prince in your waxing yeares, your father in his waining, in your pride of wit; your father is impouerished in his vnderstanding; since the cause concerneth you in act, him but in words, since this domage is but the breach of a silly vowe, if the marriage be broke, your detriment the miserie of an age without all manner of content, you may (good prince) in reason to preuent your owne harm in iustice, since you cannot affect, break off those bands: and if Protomachus shall threaten, let him play the woulfe and barke against the sun, hee cannot bite: you haue power to resist him, and friends to assist you, I but my father (Argias) how shal we pacifie him? either by perswasions (good prince) said Argias, or by inpusiō, by the laws of Solon, old men that dote must be gouerned by yong men that haue discretion, if he gainsay you there are meanes to temper

him, better he smart then you perish, my shirt is neare me my Lord, but my skin is nearest, the cause concerneth you and must not be dallied. Arsadachus hauing found a hauke fit for his own lure, and a counseller agreeable to his owne conceit, with a smiling regard he greeted Argias againe in this kind of manner: deere friend, thou hast rid me of my doubtes, and wert onely reserued me by the gods, to redresse my damage. Thou haſte complotted the means to displace Margarita, to appeasē Artosogon, now if to pacifie that raging affection that subdueth me, thou find me a remedie, I wil make thee the chiefest man in Cusco, of most authoritie in court; yea thou shalt bee my second hart (my Argias) and yet this which I require of thee though it be the difficultest in me, is the easiest in thee; for if it be lawfull for me as thou prouest, to breake my first marriage, to bridle my father, and worke also whatso is mine own will, what letteth my second wedlocke with which thy fauor shall be solemnised betweene thy angelicall Diana and me, wherethrough I shall haue peace, and thou preheminence? Argias that had alreadie caught the foxe in the snare, now laide hands of him, and with a pleasing countenance beganne thus. O Prince this last doubt is your least daunger, for where you may command my life, where you are lord of my wealth, can I be so forgetfull of duetie, thinke you to denie you my daughter, whose worth is of too great weakenesse, to entertaine such dignitie? but since it pleaseth your excellencie to daine it her in vertuous sort, command me and her to our vtmost powers, we are yours. Arsadachus thinking himselfe in heauen, thanked Argias for his courtesie, who at last wholly discouered vnto him, how secret he was to his affections, shewing him his sonnet: to be briefe, it was so comploited that without further delay, Arsadachus should bee presently wedded to Diana, which was effected so, that both these two married couples in the height of their pleasures, passed their time in wonderfull delight in Argias castle. But as nothing is hidden from the eie of Time, neither is any thing so secret which shall not be reuealed: the emperor Artosogon (by reason of Arsadachus continual abode at Argias house) discouered at last both the cause and the contract: whereupon, storming like the Ocean incensed with a north-east brise, he presently sent for Argias; and without either hearing his excuses, or regard of his intreaties, presently caused him to be torne in peeces at the tailes of foure wilde horses, then casting his mangled members into a litter, hee sent them to Diana in a present, vowing to serue her in the same sawce her father had tasted, that durst so insolently aduenture to espouse with the sole heire of his empire. The poore ladie almost dead, to see the dead bodie of her father, but more moued with her owne destruction which was to follow, fell at Arsadachus feete, beseeching him with brinish teares, which fell in her delicate bosome, to be the patronne of her fortunes. Arsadachus who loued her entirely, comforted her the best he might, assuring her safetie, in spight of his fathers tyrannie; whereupon he leuied a guard of his chiefest friends to the number of three thousand men, and shutting Diana in a strong fortresse, left her after many sweet embraces in their custodie: and for that the time of his coronation drew neere, he assembled foure thousand such as hee knew most assured; he repaired to the court, vowing in his mind such a reuenge on his father, as all the world should wonder to heare the sequele. Being arriued in court, hee cloyed the gates thereof with armed men, placing in euery turning of the citie sufficient rowts of guard to keepe the citizens from insurrection: Then ascending the royall chamber where the Emperour his father with his nobilitie were resident, hee proudly drew him from his seate royall; in which action those of the nobilitie which resisted him were slaine, the rest that tremblingly behelde the tragedie, heard this which ensueth: Arsadachus proudly setting him in his fathers seate, was ready to speake vnto the assembly, when the olde Emperour that had recouered his fall, awaking his spirites, long dulled with age and weakenesse, beganne in this sort to vpbraide his vngracious heire: Viper villaine and worse, auaunt, and get thee out of my presence. How darest thou lay handes on thy Lord? or staine the emperiall seate with thine impure and defiled person? Canst thou behold thy father without blushes, whom thou hast periured by thy peruersenesse, making my othes frustrate through thine odious follies? ah caitife as thou art! more depraued then Caligula, more bloudy indeed then Nero, more licentious then Catuline: would God either thou hadst beene vnborne, or better taught. Thou second Tarquine fostered by me to worke tragedies in Cusco: thou prowde yongman, thy beauty thou hast employed in riot, thy forces in tyranny: Oh vnkind wretch, I see, I see with mine eies the subuersion of this Empire, and that which I haue kept fourtie yeeres, thou wilt loose in lesse then thirtie moneths. How can thy subiects be obedient to thee that despisest thy father? How can these Nobles hope for iustice at thy hands, that hast iniuriously attempted mee, an olde man, thy father, that bred thee, thy lord, that cherished thee, the emperour that must inherite thee. What may strangers trust in thee, that hast broken thy faith with Protomachus, abused the loue of Margarita, and all for a faire faced minion, whom if I catch in my clawes I will so temper as thou shalt haue little lust to triumph? O what pittie is it thou peruerse man, to see how I haue bought thee of the gods with sighes; how thy mother hath deliuered thee with paine; how we both haue nourished thee with trauelles; how we watched to sustaine thee; how we laboured to releue thee; and after, how thou rebellest, and art so vicious, that wee thy miserable parents must not die for age, but for the grieve wherewith thou doest torment vs? Ah woe wo is me that beholdest thy lewdnesse, and wretched art thou to follow it: well did I hope that thy courage in armes, thy comelinesse in person, thy knowledge in letters were vertues enow to yelde me hope, and subdue thy follies: but now I say and say againe, I affirme and affirme againe, I sweare and sweare againe, that if men which are adorned with natural gifts do want requisit vertues, such haue a knife in their hands wherewith they do strike and wound themselues, a fire on their shoulders wherewith they burne themselues, a rope on their necks to hang themselues, a dagger at their breasts to stab themselues, a stone to stumble at, a hill to tumble downe. Ah would to God that members wanted in thee, so that vice did not abound: or woulde the losse of thine eies might recompence the lewdnes of thine errours. But thou laughest to heare me lament, which sheweth the small hope of amends, thou hast no touch of conscience, no feare of the gods, no awe of thy parents, what then should I hope of thee? would God thy death, for that were an end of detriment: if thy life,

I beseech the gods for mine own sake close mine eies by death, lest I see thy vniust dealings.

In this state Arsadabus that was resolued in his vil-lany without any reply (as if scorning the old man) caused his tong by a minister to be cut out, then com-maunded his right hand to be strooke off, wherewith he had signed the writ of Argias death; afterwards apparel-ling him in a fooles coate, and fetching a vehement laughter, he spake thus: Cuscans, wonder not, it is no seueritie I shew, but iustice; for it is as lawfull for me to forget I am a sonne, as for him to forget he is a father; his tongue hath wronged me, and I am reuenged on his tongue, his hand hath signed to the death of my deere Argias, and it hath payed the penaltie: and since the old man doateth, I haue apparelled him according to his propertie and impatience, wishing all those that loue their liues, not to crosse mee in my reuenges, nor assist him in his sinister practises. This saide, he made all the nobilitie to sweare loyaltie vnto him; and Diana laughing incessantly at the old man, who continual pointed with his left hand, and lifted his eies to heauen for reuenge, sometimes he imbraced the nobles, inciting them by signes to reuenge, but all was in vaine, scarce subdued their affections.

In the meane while, the newes of these nouelties were spread throw the citie, so that many tooke armes to reuenge the old emperour, who were presently and incontinently slain by the souldiers: in briefe, as in all conflicts, the weake at last went to the wall, and neces-sitie inforced such as misdeemeed of Arsadabus pro-ceedings, to allow of them in shew: the day of coronation drew on, against which time Lelia the Empresse (little suspecting that which had fallen out) arriued in Cusco, who hearing of the hard measure was offered her husband by her vngratiuous sonne (for Artosogon was shut vp all the day till meale times, when Arsadachus called for him foorth to laugh at him) she entred the pallace with such cries, as might haue made the hardest heart melt to heare them, where clasping of her armes about the necke of the olde and aged man, who melted in teares to behold the melancholy of the chaste matron, she cried out and complained in this manner: O you iust gods; can you see these wrongs without remedie? are you deafe to heare, or pittilesse to redresse? Ah, looke downe looke downe from your thrones, and behold my throbbes, witnes such wrongs as the sunne hath neuer seene the like; the dogge is gratefull to his maister for his meate, the elephant to his teacher for his knowledge, the serpent to the hunts man for his life; but our vn-toward sonne, for releeuing him, hath grieued vs, for giuing him sweete milke in his youth, doth feede vs with bitter aloes in our age; and I for bearing him with many groanes, am now betraied by him to many griefes: Ah Artosogon, ah my deere Artosogon, it is enough grieve for thee to indure, let me weep (for the old man, to see her, shed many teares) because thou sufferest, that as thou decayest through tyrany, I may die with teares. This said, sorrow stopped the passage of her speech, and they both swowned, hee to beholde his Lelia so forlorne, she to see her Artosogon so martyred: he that saw Venus lamenting Adonis, Aurora bewailing Memnon, Mirrha her tosst fortunes, saw but the shadow of cares, not the substance of complaints; for this sorrowe of the princes was onely beyond compare, and past beleefe; wherein so long they demeaned themselues, till age and sorrow, after long strife surrendred to death, who pit-ties the olde princes, being despised of their lewd sonne, and ended their sorrowes in ending them. The rumour of whose fall was no sooner bruited in the eares of Arsadachus, but that instead of solemnizing their funeralles, he frequented his follies, instead of lamenting for them, hee laughed at them, causing them for fashion sake to haue the fauour of the graue, not for any fauour he bare them: then calling for Diana to his court, he honoured her as a goddesse, causing his subiects to erect a shrine, and to sacrifice vnto her: and such was his superstitious and besotted blindnes, that he thought it the only paradise of the world to be in her presence, no one was better rewarded then he that could best praise hir; sometimes would he (attiring him like a second Diana readie to chace) disguise himselfe like a shepheard, and sitting apart solitarily, where he might be in her presence, he would recount such passions as gaue certaine signes in him of an excellent wit, but matched with exceeding wickednes: among which these tenne, as the most excellent for varietie sake, after his so many villanies, I thought good to set downe in this place.

*I see a new sprung sunne that shines more cleerely,
That warmes the earth more blithly with bir brightnes
That spreads bir beams more faire, and shines more cheerly
Then that cleere sun that glads the day with lightnes.*

*For but by outward beate the one offends me,
The other burnes my bones, and melts their marrow:
The one when he sets on further blends me,
The other ceasles makes her eie loues arrow.*

*From that a shower a shadow of a tree,
 A foggie mist may safely me protect,
 But this through clouds and shades doth passe and perce me
 In winters frosts the others force doth flee:
 But this each season shines in each respect,
 Ecb where, ech boure, my bart doth plague and perce me.*

This other for the strange forme therof, though it haue the second place deserues the first, which howsoeuer you turne it backward or forward, is good sence, and hath the rimes and cadence according, the curiousnes and cunning whereof the learned may iudge: the first stands is the complaint, the second the counsel; both which he wrote in the entrance of his loue with Diana.

Complaint.

1 3 2	Teares, cares, wrongs, grieve feele I,	1 1 3 2
2 2 1	Wo, frownes, scornes, crafts nill cease,	4 2 4 1
3 1 4	Yeares, months, daies, bowers do flee	3 3 1 4
4 4 3	Fro mee away flieth peace:	2 4 2 3
1	Opprest I liue (alas) unhappily,	2
2	Rest is exilde, scornde, plagde, thus am I.	1

Answere.

1 3 2	Mend her, or change fond thought,	1 1 3 2
2 2 1	Minde her, then end thy minde,	4 2 4 1
3 1 4	Ende thee will sorrowe sought,	3 3 1 4
4 4 3	Kinde if thou art: too blinde,	2 4 2 3
1	Such loue flieth farre, lest thou perceiue and proue	2
2	Much sorow, grief, care, sigbing, breeds such loue.	1

The third though short for the method, is verie sweete, and is written in imitation of Dolce the Italian, beginning thus: Io veggio, &c.

*I see with my hearts bleeding,
Thus boorely throgb my pain my life desires,
I feele the flames exceeding,
That burne my heart by vndeserued fires,
But whence these fires haue breeding,
I cannot finde though great are my desires.*

*O miracle eterne!
That thus I burne in fire, and yet my fire cannot discern.*

The fourth being written vpon a more wanton subiect, is farre more poeticall, and hath in it his decoram as well as the rest.

*When as my pale to her pure lips united,
(Like new fallne snow vpon the morning rose)
Sucke out those sweets wherin my soule delited,
Good lord how soon dispersed were my woes!*

*And from those gates whence comes that balmy breath,
That makes the sunne to smile when he ariseth,
I drew a life subdewing neering death,
I suckt a sweete that euerie sweete compriseth.*

*There tooke my soule his hand-fast to desire,
There chose my heart his paradise on earth,
There is the beauen whereto my hopes retire,
There pleasure bred, and thence was Cupids birth:
Such is their power that by a touch they seuer.
The heart from paines that liu'd in sorrowes euer.*

An other time, at such time as in the entrance of loue he despaired of al succour, hee desperately wrote this and that verie prettely.

*Euen at the brinke of sorrowes ceasles stremes,
All well-nie drownd through dalliance and disdaine,
Hoping to winne the truce in my extreames,
To perce that marble heart where pride remaines.*

*I send salt teares, sad sighes, and ruthful lines,
Firme vowes (and with these true men) my desire,
Which in his lasting sufferance scarce repines,
To burne in ceaslesse Aetna of her ire.*

*All whiche (and yet of all, the least might serue)
If too too weake to wakene true regarde,
Vouchsafe O beauen that see how I deserue,
Since you are neuer partiall in rewarde,
That ere I die she may with like successe, Weepe, sigh, write, vow and die without redresse.*

This other in the selfe like passion, but with more gouernment he wrote, which for that cause I place here consequentlie.

*Heape frowne on frowne, disdaine upon disdaine,
Ioyne care, to care, and leaue no wrong vnwrrought,
Suppose the worst, and smile at euerie paine,
Thinke my pale lookes of enuie not of thought.*

*In errors maske let reasons eie be masked,
Send out contempts to sommon death to slay me,
To all these tyrant woes tho I be tasked,
My faith shall flourish tho these paines decay me.*

*And tho repyning loue to cinders burne me,
I wil be fam'de for sufferance to the last,
Since that in life no tedious paines could turne me,
And care my flesh, but not my faith could wast.
Tho after death for all this lifes distresse,
My soule your endles honours shall confesse.*

Another melancholy of his for the strangenesse there-of deserueth to be registred, and the rather, in that it is in immitation of that excellent Poet of Italie, Lodouico Pascale, in his sonnet beginning; Tutte le telle hauean de'l ciel l'impere.

*Those glorious lampes that beauen illuminate,
And most incline to retrograde aspects,
Vpon my birth-day shonde the worst effects,
Thralling my life to most sinister fate.*

*Where-through my selfe estrangde from truth a while,
Twixt pains, and plagues, midst torments and distresse,
Supposde to finde for all my routh redresse,
But now beliefe, nor hope, shal me beguile.*

*So that (my heart from ioyes exiled quite)
Ile pine in grieve through fierce disdaines accurst, Scornde by the world, aliae to nought but spite:
Hold I my tongue? t'is bad; and speake I? wurst,
Both helpe me noughts; and if perhaps I write,
T'is not in hope, but lest the heart should burst.*

Another in immitation of Martelli hauing the right nature of an Italian melancholie, I haue set down in this place.

O shadie vales, O faire inriched meades,
 O sacred woodes, sweete fields, and rising mountaines,
 O painted flowers, greene herbes, where Flora treads, Refresht by wanton windes, and watrie fountaines.

O all you winged queristers of woode,
 That piercht aloft your former paines report,
 And strait againe recount with pleasant moode,
 Your present ioyes in sweete and seemely sort.

O all you creatures, whosoeuer tbriue,
 On mother earth, in seas, by aire or fire:
 More blest are you, then I here vnder sunne,
 Loue dies in me, when as he doth reviue
 In you; I perish vnder beauties ire,
 Where after stormes, windes, frosts, your life is wonne.

All other of his, hauing allusion to the name of Diana and the nature of the Moone, I leaue, in that few men are able to second the sweete conceits of Philip du Portes, wose Poeticall writings being alreadie for the most part englished, and ordinarilie in euerie mans hands, Arsadachus listed not to imitate, onely these two others which follow, being his own inuentiō, came to my hand, which I offer to your iudgement (Ladies) for that afterward I meane to prosecute the historie.

Twixt reuerence and desire, how am I vexed?
Now prone to lay ambitious bandes on beautie,
Now hauing feare to my desires annexed,
Now haled on by hope, now staid by dutie..

*Emboldned thus, and ouerrulde in striuing,
To gaine the soueraine good my heart desireth:
I liue a life, but in effect no liuing,
Since dread subdues desire that most aspireth.*

*Tho must I bide the combate of extreames, Faine to enioy, yet fearing to offend,
Like him that striues against resisting stremes,
In hope to gaine the harbor in the end:
Which hauen bir grace, which happy grace enioyed
Both reuerence, and desire, are well employed.*

The conclusion of all his poetrerie, I shut vp with this his Hiperbolical praise, shewing the right shape of his dissembling nature.

*Not so much borrowed beautie bath the starres,
Not so much bright the mightie eie of day,
Not so much cleare bath Cinthia where she warres,
With deathes neere neece in her blacke array.*

*Not so true essence haue the sacred soules,
That from theiur naturall mansions are deuided,
Not so pure red bath Bacchus in his boules,
As bath that face wherby my soule is guided.*

*Not so could art or nature if they sought,
In curious workes themselues for to excede,
Or second that which they at first had wrought,
Nor so could time, or all the gods proceede,
As to enlarge, mould, tbinke, or match that frame,
As I do bonour under Dians name.*

Now leaue we him in his dalliance, making all things in a readinesse for his coronation, and returne we to the constant Margarita, who liuing in her solitarie seate, minding nothing but melancholies, triumphing in nothing but hir teares; finding at length, the prefixed time of Arsadachus returne almost expired, and her impatience so great, as shee could no longer endure his absence, in a desperate furie setting light by her life, she resolued priuily to flie from her fathers court to finde out Arsadachus in his owne countrey. For which cause she brake with a faithfull follower of hers called Fawnia, by whose assistance, without the knowledge of any other in the disguise of a country maid, she gate out of the citie, attended onely by this trustie follower, about the shutting in of the euening, at such time as her traine without suspect intended their other affaires, and by reason of her melancholie little suspected her departure out of doores: and so long shee travelled (desire guiding her steps, and sorrow seating her selfe in her heart) that she gat into an vnpeopled and huge forest, where meeting with a poore shepheard, shee learned sure tidings of her way to Cusco, keeping in the most vntrodden and vnfreighted wayes for feare of pursute, weeping as shee walked incessantly; so that neither Fawniaes words, nor the hope she had to reuisit her beloued could rid her of ruthfulness: three dayes shee so walked, feeding her thoughts on her owne wretchednesse, till on the fourth about the breake of the day when Pbæbus had newly chased the morne, crowned with roses from the desired bed of her beloued paramor, she sate her downe by a faire fountaine, washing her blubbered face in the cleare spring, and cooling her thirst in the cristal waters thereof: here had she not long rested hir selfe, talking with hir Fawnia in what manner she would vpbraide Arsadachus in Cusco, of his vnkind absence, when as sodainlie a huge lion which was accustomed to refresh himselfe at that spring, brake out of the thicket behinde their backes, Fawnia that first spied him was soone surprised, then she cried, and rent in peeces (in that she had tasted too much of fleshly loue) before she feared. Margarita that saw the massacre, sate still attending hir owne tragedie, for nothing was more welcome to hir then death, hauing lost her friend, nor nothing more expected: but see the generostie and vertue of the beast insteede of renting her limmes he sented her garments, in the place of tearing her peecemeale, hee laied his head gentlie in hir lap, licking her milkewhite hand, and shewing al signes of humilitie, in steede of inhumanitie. Margarita seeing this recouered hir sences, and pittifullly weeping spake thus: Alas ye gods, why yeeld you sorrowes to those that despise fancie, and betray you them by death, who desire to flee detriment? wo is me, how fortunate were Margarita, to haue bin dismembred? how forlorne was Fawnia to be thus mangled, ah tyrant beast hadst thou spared her, her vertue had deserued it, hadst thou spoiled me, why I was reserued for it, for what care haue not I part in? or from what ioy am not I parted? Loue that is a Lord of pittie to some, is pittlesse to me, hee giueth other the rose, but me the thorne; he bestoweth wine on others, and me viniger, he crowneth the rest with lawrell in respect of their flourishing fortune, but me with Ciprus the tree dedicated to funerall: out alas that I liue or that I haue time to speake, I liue, in that I haue had time so long, to loue with neglect, and to pine in the delay. Ah curteous beast (said she) why executeſt thou not that which my sorrow doth prosecute? let thy teeth (I beseech thee, rid me of loues tiranny. This saide, shee pittifullly wept; but the Lion ceased not to play with her, stroking her with his rough paw, as if willing to appease her, but all was in vaine, till that sleepe by reason of her sorrow seized her, and setled her selfe in the lions eies, where we leaue them, returning to Mosco, where the day no sooner appeared, but Protomachus (according to his custome comming to visite his daughter) found her sodaynly fled, whereat storming incessantly, he presently put al her attendants to most bitter and strange death, sending out espialles through all the country to find out Margarita, who by reason of her solitarie walkes, was free from their search: at last, looking among her secret papers, hee found a letter, wherein the princesse had written to Arsadacbus, that if hee presently returned not, she would shortly visit him. By reason whereof, being a wise prince, he gathered some circumstance of her flight; and leuying a power of souldiers, with as much expedition as he might, he set forward towardes Cusco, where I leaue him, to returne to Arsinous, who studying Magicke in his melancholy cell, found by reason of the aspect of the planets, that the houre of his reuenge was at hand: whereupon beeing resolued of the place, whch was Cusco, and the manner, with all other actors in the tragedie, he being desirous to behold that with his eies which hee had long time longed for with his hart, forsook his melancholy home, and set forward toward Cusco. And as he passed on his way, it was his chance to beholde where Margarita lay sleeping, hauing the lions head in her lap, whereat beng amazed and affrighted, in that he heartily loued the princesse, he with his staffe awaked her: who seeing a man so quergrowne in haieres and yeeres; yet carrying as much shew in his countenance, of honour, as discontent, softly stole from the lion, and left him sleeping there: sodainely seasing Arsinous by the hand, she said thus: Father, thanke fortune that hath giuen thee time to escape death if thou list, and folow me, who hath both neede of thy cun-selles, and of such a reuerend companion as thou art. Which said, they both withdrew the out of the way hasting two long houres without euer looking backe, till at last, when Arsinous saw her and himselfe in safetie, he courted her thus: Countrie lasse by your coate, but courtlie dame by your countenance, whither trauel you this waies, or for what cause are you so woful? Forlorne man by thy apparel, but honourable sir by thy behaviour, I am trauelling to Cusco, where both remaineth the cause of my woe, and the means to cure it. May I be so bold said Arsinous to know of you what you are, and what you aisle? It neither pertaineth to you that I tell it (quoth Margarita) neither pleaseth it me to discouer it, for the one will seeke my harme, the other yeelde you little helpe. Then quoth Arsinous smiling, I will trie mine owne cunning, to crosse a womans resolution, whereupon intreating Margarita to set her downe vnder a Palme tree, to auoid the heat of the sunne, which being at his noonetide flamed very fiercely, he drew a booke out of his bosome, and read so long til sodainely there appeared one in selfe like shape and substance as Arsadacbus was wont to be, whome Margarita no sooner espied, but that she ranne fiercely to-wards him that hastily fled, she cried out; Oh stay thee (my Arsadacbus) stay thee, behold thy Margarita that hath left her fathers court, hazarded her honours, aduentured all dangers for thy loue, for thy sake, oh stay.

This said, the vision sodainely vanished, and she striuing to embrace him, caught his shadow: whereupon vehemently weeping, she exclaimed on the gods, ouer loue and his laws, renting hir haires, and beating her breasts in such sort, as it was pittie to beholde it: and had died in that agonie, had not Arsinous recomforted hir in this sort: Fie Margarita, doth this beseeme your wisdome, to demeane sorrow without cause, and seeke your death through a delusion? why princesse whateuer you saw was but an apparition, not the substance, de-uised only by your seruant Arsinous to discouer you.
Shee hearing the name of Arsinous presently started vp, and clasping hir armes about his aged necke, whom she sodainly had discouered, she spake thus: Ah my father, pardon my folly, that sought to keep that secret, which is discouered by your science. Tut madam, the pardon is to be granted by your hands, said he, who are most iniured; was it euer seene (quoth he smilingly) a ladie to bee so besotted on a shadow? Ah pardon me (said Margarita)
I held it for the substance: but father, I pray you tell me whither you intend your iourney? Arsinous desirous in short words to satisfie her, tolde her that he pretended his course to Cusco; forsaking his melancholie cell of purpose, to meet her whose danger he had perceiued in priuate being in his studie: further he told her many things touching the Emperours search after her, not pretermittting any thing to content her, but concealing that which tended to her ruine, which with ernefull heart hee inwardlie perceiued, Margarita som-what reioyced with the companie of such a guide, sate her downe seeking some herbes in the forrest to releue her hunger, Arsinous that perceiued it said thus: See madam, what loue can do, that fashioneth courtlie stom-

acks, to whomely acates the gods grant you may speede well, for I see you can feede well, hereon he opened his booke and read, and sodainely a paullion was pict, the table was reared, the dishes serued in, with all kinde of delicates, the musicke exceeding pleasant, so that Margarita was rauished to behold this, but being animated by Arsinous she fell to her meate, certifying him at dinner time of such things as had passed in her fathers court in his absence; thus in iollitie appeased they their hungrie stomackes, and eased their sorrowfull hearts, till occasion called them forth to trauell, at which time the paullion seruitors, and all things vanished, and onely Arsinous and Margarita were left alone, hauing two squires attending on them, with two rich gennets brauelie trapped fit for their managing, which they speedely backed, talking merrilie as they rode of such strange things as Arsinous had wrought by his art, and so long they trauelled towards Cusco, that they arived within two leagues of the same, vnderstanding by y<sup>e</sup> great troops that rode that way, that the coronation was the next day following, Margarita by Arsinous counsaile staied in the castle of Aged knight, where hee wrought so by his arte, that although Margarita had a desire to heare tidings of Arsadachus, yet made she no question of him all the time of her abode there. And here let vs leaue them, and returne to Cusco to the accursed and abhominable tyrant Arsadachus, who as soone as the day beganne to breake, the birds to hale forth the sunne, the sunne to haste his course, arose from his bed, apparelling himselfe in rich and princelie robes: about which houre Diana was not idle, for whatso of excellency could be bought for money, or had for friendship, she wanted nothing thereof to set out her beautie: the courtiers to grace their Emperor, spared no cost, the cittizens no triumphs, so as the triumph of Antigonus Epiphanus, in cōparison hereof was but a trifle, the maner whereof, since it was miraculous, I haue thought good to mention in this place. First came fие thousand of the yoongest Cuscanes out of the pallace, trotting along the streetes vnto the temple armed, according to the Roman fashion: after them as many Tartars armed after their maner, who were folowed with three thousand Thracians, and Plessians, all of which carried siluer lances and shieldes, hauing their headpeeces decked with ostrige plumes and emeralds: after them marched two hundred and fiftie sword-players, who followed the braue caualiers that marched before; after whom trotted the horsemen, of which one thousand, together with their horses, were all pompously garnished with golde and siluer, with a garland of gold vpon their heads: after thē rode another thousand horsemen, decked with golde and purple, with lances of golde, headed with pointed diamonds: next them rode those which were called the emperours minions, clothed in cloth of tissue, their horses trapped in greene cloth of gold, their stirrups of siluer: after them came the Emperours guard on horse backe, hauing their caparisons studded with iron and brasse, wearing vpon their armors a certain curious stoale, wherein, with gold and siluer, silke, and gossanpine threed of many colours, were woven the images of those gods, which the Cuscans most worshipped: after whome came one thousand fие hundredth armed chariots, the most part drawn by two white genets, but fortie of them by foure: after them there came a chariot drawne by elephants, and attended by sixe and thirtie elephants, with eight hundred yong men attending them as their keepers, attired with ornaments of golde, and hauing their temples encompassed with wreathes of roses, and siluer bends: after them came eight hundred yong laddes leading many fat oxen with gilded herse to be sacrificed to the gods: next vnto them eight hundred ministers bearing platters of gold with pretious stones, vnicorns horns, and elephants teeth to be sacrificed for the health of the emperour: next which, an infinite number of statues were carried, not onely of their gods, but also of those fiends they feared; likewise the images of all their kings deceased, according as euery one deserued for his excellency, apparelled in goodly garments of golde and siluer, and other precious and inestimable iewelles, each of them hauing a table at his feete, in which al his noble and worthy actions were written. There were likewise other semblances of the day, the night, of heauen, of the morning and mid-day, with an infinite number of vessels likewise forged out of gold and siluer, and borne by the slaues of the empire: after these came six hundred pages of the emperour apparelled in golde: after whome came three hundred virgins in white cloth of tissue, burning with censors in their handes of siluer, and Agate spreading sundry sorts of sweete perfumes followed by fие hundred coches of siluer, wherein Dianae damosels were carried: after which came fourescore of beaten gold, wherein all the princely heirs of the empire were royally seated. After all these the Emperour with his Diana rode in one coach attended with one hundred attired in beaten cloth of siluer, casting rich cloth before the coach, whereon the horses that drew the Emperour should treade. It were a vaine thing for me to set downe the riches of Arsadachus garments, or the attire of his god-desse: sufficeth it that it exceeded that which is past, and all was beyond beleefe: In this solemne sort entred they the temple, where (according to the custome) they were sacred, annointed and inthroned, receiuing homage of the princes. And after in selfe like pompe returned they to the pallace: where hauing many rich delicates prepared for them with sweet and melodious musike they sate them downe to eate; where, after they had somewhat refreshed their stomackes, and whetted their wittes with costly wines, Arsadabus remembraunce him of his Margarita, called for his box, merily iesting with Diana, and saying that the Empresse of Mosco deserued so small a remembrance, which was no sooner brought vnto him, and opened, but (see the iudgement of iust heauen) a sodain flame issued thereout, which with a hideous odour so bestraught Arsadabus of his senses, that thrusting the tables from him, and ouerthrowing whatsoeuer incountred him, he brake out from his seate, cursing the heauens, renting his embalmed haire, tearing his royll vestures: his nobilitie that saw this, became amazed, and among the rest, Brasidas, who fled for the murther in Mosco, and was at that time in great fauour with him, came to pacifie him; who no sooner espied him, but taking a huge boule of wine, and crying out, Brasidas, I drinke to Philenia whome thou murtheredst, he tasted the wine, and with the cup tooke him such a mighty blow on the head that he pashed out all his braines: all they that behelde this sate still; some for feare stole secretly out of his presence; among the rest, wofull Diana rather like the statue of Venus raised in Paphos, then the louely Lucina that gaue light to all Arsadabus delights, sate still quaking and trembling, as one readie to depart this life; whom when the Emperor espied where she sate, he hastily ranne vnto her, crying out; Ah tyrant that hast robbed me of my heart, my hope and life, let me sacrifice to Nemesis; I will sacrifice: which said, with the caruing knife he slit up the poore innocent ladies bodie, spreading her entrailes about the pallace floore, and seizing on her heart, hee tare it in peeces with his tyrannous teeth, crying, Sic itur ad astra; by this time the rumour was spread throughout the pallace, and from the pallace through the citie: by which meanes the triumphs which were commenced were turned to mournings, for Arsadachus vsed such cruelties euery way, that the Numantines for all their inhumanitie could neuer be able to match him. And in this fitte continued he for the space of sixe houres, at which time he entred the secrets of his pallace, and finding there a yong sonne which his Diana had bred and he begotten; he tooke it by the legges, battering out the braines thereof against the walles, in such sort as the beholders were amazed to see him; this done he flung it on the ground among the dead members of his mother, calling on the name of Artosogon and Lelia his father and mother, and telling them, that in some part he had yeelded them reuenge. By this time Arsinous and Margarita were entred the citie, who hearing the turmoile thorow the citie, questioned the cause thereof, and were certified by those that passed by, in what estate the emperour was at that present. Margarita hearing the cause, beganne wofully to exclaine, til she was pacified by Arsinous, who told hir that the nature of the medicine which he gaue her, was such, that if Arsadachus were constant to her, it would increase his affection; if false, it would procure madnesse: to which effect, since the matter was brought, it coulde not be but the yoong Emperour had wronged her. With these perswasions hee drew her to the pallace, where thrusting through the prease Arsinous thought himselfe happy to see such a reuenge wrought on his enemie. Margarita was heartlesse to behold the dolefull estate of Arsadachus, so that forgetting the honor of his name, and the modestie of her sex, she brake thorow the guard, and ranne to Arsadachus, where he sate embrewed in the bloud of innocents, and with teares spake thus vnto him; Is this the ioy of my loue (said she) are these thy welcomes to thy beloued in steede of triumphes to feast her with tragedies, in lieu of banquets, with blood? why speaketh not my deare spouse? why lookest thou so ghastly? O if it bee thy pleasure to shew crueltie on me, make it short by a death, not lingering by life. Arsadachus all this while sate mute gastly staring on Margarita; at last fiercely flinging her from his necke, his rage reuived and he cried out; Diana, ah Diana by thy bright lookes, by thy beautifull lockes, let not thy ghost be displeased, thou shalt haue bloud for bloud, here is the sacrifice, here is the instrument; wherevpon drawing a rapier out of the sheath of one of those who ministred fast by him, he ranne Margarita quite thorow the bodie: and in this sort with bedlam madnesse fled out of the presence to his privy chamber. The poor princesse euen when death beganne to arrest her, pursued him: and as she indeuoured to vtter hir moanes, fell downe dead on the floore; whom Arsinous wofully bewept, and in the presence of the princesse of Cusco, discouered what she was. Then beganne each of them to imagine a new feare, doubting lest the Emperour of Mosco should reuenge her death at their handes. For which cause they consulted how to shut vp Arsadachus til Protomachus were certified, which they effected sodainely, in that they found him laide on his bed, and soundly sleeping, enforced thereunto by the industrie and art of Arsinous. Who after he perceiued the whole assembly of princes dismayed, caused the ministers to gather vp the mangled members and couer thē with a rich cloth of gold, and afterwards seeing al the courtiers attentiuē, he beganne in this manner: Thales (ye worthie princes) after he had trauelled long time, and at last returned home, being asked what strange or rare thing hee had seene in his voyage, answered; an olde tyrant: for certaine it is, that such as practise open wrong, liue not long; for the gods yeeld them shortest life that haue the wickedest wayes: muse not therefore to see your yong Emperour in these passions, whose sinnes if they be ripped vp exceede absence, whose tyrannies surpass the beleefe of any, but such as haue tried them. What, know you not of his disobedience, who spared not his owne father that begate him, his deere mother that bred him? What, knowe you not of his periurie? that hath falsified his faith to Protomacbus, betraied and murthered Margarita, and at one time frustrated the hope of both these empires? What, know you not of his murthers, where these in sight are sufficient to conuict him: but those I sigh for are more odious, who thorow his lewd lust bereft me (poore Arsinous) of my daughter, and her of an husband? But the iust gods haue suffered me to behold the reuenge with mine eies, which I haue long wished for with my heart. Truely (yee Cuscans) ye are not to maruell at these chaunces, if you bee wise, neither to wonder at your emperours troubles, if you haue discretion; for as vnitie (according to Pythagoras) is the father of number, so is vice the originall of many sorows. When the fish Tentis appeareth aboue the water, there foloweth a tempest: when euils are growne to head, there must needely follow punishment; for as the gods in mercie delay, so at last in iustice they punish. Heare me yee men of Cusco, and consider my words, if neuer as yet any tyrant liued without his tragedie what should you expect? In faith no other thing but the confirmation of Platoes reason, who saide that it is vnecessary for him to liue, that hath not learned how to liue well. The tyrant of Sicely Dionisius, (of whome it is said, that he gaue as great rewarde to those that inuented vices, as Rome did to those that conquered realmes) died a priuate man and in miserie. Nowe what in respect of this man can you hope of Arsadacbus, who hired not men to inuent, but did himselfe in person practise: beleue me, beleue me, your sufferance of such a viper in your realme, is a hainous sinne in you; and as Dion saith, it is but meete they be partakers to the paine, who haue wincked at the fault. Caligula the emperor of Rome was so disordered in his life, that if all the Romanes had not watched to take life from him, he would haue waited to take life from them; this monster bare a brooch of gold in his cap, wherin was written this sentence: Vtinam omnis populus vnam præcise ceruicem haberet, vt uno atlu omnes necarem. And what was this man in regarde of Arsadacbus? Truly almost innocent; for the one pretended kindnesse to those that gently perswaded him, but the other neither feared the gods, neither spared his friends, neither regarded iustice, and can such a monster deserue life? The Romanes when the tyrant Tiberius was made away, sacrificed in their open streetes, in that the gods had reft them of such a troublesome wretch; why cease

you then (you Cuscans) to sacrifice to your gods, to the end they may deliuer you of this troubled world. It was a lawe among the Romanes, that that childe which had disobeyed his father, robbed any temple, iniured any widdowe, committed any treason to a stranger should be banished from Rome, and disinherited of his fathers possessions; and what hath not Arsadachus done of these things? and why is not Arsadachus punished? Scedasus daughters being violated in Lacedemon, and vnuenged by the magistrates of the cittie; the gods afflicted both the guiltie and vnguiltie with plagues, in that they afflicted not punishment on the offenders: and what can you hope (ye Cuscans) that suffer this sincke of sinne to triumph in your pallaces? You will perhappes say, that no man is to be punished afore hee be conuicted. And (I pray you) for what should ill men pleade? since as Chrisippus saith, nothing is profitable vnto them. You see testimonies of his murther before your eies, tokens of his periury I ring in your eares, his lust the gods abhorre, and shall he yet liue?

This said, there grew a great muttering among the nobilitie, and the noise thereof awaked the emperor (whose sleep had stayed the working of the enchantment) who finding himselfe wholy imbrewed with blood, his doores fast locked vnto him, beganne to misdeeme: whereupon calling and exclaiming on his attendants, some of them at last fearefully opened the doores. The nobilitie hearing of his freedome, presently fled; but when as the fatall fruits of his furie were discouered vnto him, and his ruthfull eies beheld what his hands had executed, Lord what pittifull exclamations vsed he! how hee rent his breast with furie, how he tare his face: At last, laying him downe vpon the mangled members of Diana, and embracing the dead bodie of Margarita, hee washed both of them in his teares, and demeaned himselfe so wofully, as it was wonder to behold; at last, with a bitter sigh he brake out into these bitter words, (whilst his nobles hearing of his recoverie, beganne to reenter the pallace) True it is that Plutarch saith (quoth he) that life is a stage-play, which euен vnto the last act hath no decoram: life is replenished with al vices, and empouerished of all vertue. Sooth spake Chrisippus when he alleadged this, that the euilles of this life are so many, that the gods can not inuent more, neither a liuing man indure halfe; so that rightly I may say with Hercules:

*Plenus malorum sum iam, nec superest locus
Alijs nouis recipiandis*—

But why philosophie I of life complaining on it where I ought onely to conuict my selfe? It is not the wretchednesse, but the wickednesse of life that maketh it odious. Then hast thou occasion (wretched man) as thou arte to learne thee, who hauing sinned in the excesse, oughtest rightly to haue thy comforts in defect. Yea I haue sinned O ye heauens, first in beguiling this chast Margarita with hope, in wronging my deere parents in their age, in slaughtering this poore infant with his mother. Oh Aetna of miseries that I see! oh ye Cuscan princes, why suffer you me aliue, that haue stained your empire with such infamies? why vnsheathe you not your swords? for pitie delay not, for pittie rid me of life: alas, why craue I pittie, that haue beene altogether pittilesse? ah yee flockes of flatterers, where are you nowe that fedde me with follies? come nowe and punish my follies in me: none heareth me, all forsake me, despised of the gods, hated of men; ah iust heauens, I honour you that haue left mee occasions in my selfe, you cursed eies of mine that haue glutted your selues in vanitie, since you refst me of my senses, I will be reuenged on your sight: which saide, hee drew out his eies weeping piteously in so erneful maner, that the whole assistance became compassionate: at last some one of his nobles labouring to pacifie him, alleadging reasons of great weight, which in a man of gouvernement were sufficient to qualifie the furie of sorrow, he replied thus: Friends and princes the force of reason, (as the Stoicks say) is not to bee vsed in those things that are not, it concerneth not me (lords) that I liue, perswade me not for that cause to entertaine and thinke of life, for if it be odious to those that through infirmities of their flesh grow in hate with it, what should it be to me, who haue not onely a bodie aggreeued with sorrowes, but a soule sweltered in sinnes; lament mee not therefore, neither releue me; for as the dewe causeth leprosie in man though it yeeldeth life to floures, so teares rather torment those that dispaire then releue them; and though they comfort the distressed, yet they are tedious to the desperate: I feele my forlorne heart (you nobles) cloyed with thoughtes and longing to be disburthened. I see with mine inward eies the ghosts of these poore slaughtered soules calling for iustice at my hands; stay me not therefore from death, but assist me to die, for by this meanes you shall ridde your countrey of a plague, the world of a monster. Such as are wounded with brasen weapons, are according to Aristotles opinion soone healed; so likewise are they that are taunted with easie sorrow: but whereas the passions excede reason, they haue no issue but death; the instrument that woundeth is deadly. Ah my heart, I finde Plutarcb's reason of force; for as the sunne is to the heauen, so is the heart to the man; and as the one eclipseth, the other cloudueth; when the one danceth, the other dieth. I feele thee (poore heart) dispossess of al ioy, and shal I continue possest of life? no (you ghosts) I will visit you. This saide, he grapled about the floore among the dead bodies, and at last he griped that weapon wherewith he slew Margarita, wherewith piercing his hated bodie he breathed his last, to the generall benefit of a the Cuscans, who in that they would pacifie the emperour Protomachus, who as they vnderstoode had leuied a huge armie after they had enterred their slaine emperour with his faire loue, bestowed honourable funerall on the princesse Margarita, on whose sepulchre, as also on that of Dianaes, Arsinous wrote these epitaphs.

Margaritaes Epitaph.

*A blessed soule from earthly prison losed,
Ye happie heuens bath faith to you conuaide,
The earthly holde within this tombe inclosed,
White Marble stones within your wombe is laide:
The fame of ber that soule and bodie lost,
Suruiues from th'ile to the Bractrian coast.*

*A precious pearle in name, a pearle in nature,
Too kinde in loue vnto too fierce a foe,
By him she lou'd, shee dide, O cursed creature,
To quite true faith with furious murther sol
But vaine are teares for thos whom death bath slaine,
And sweete is fame that makes dead liue againe.*

Dianaes Epitaph.

*Thy babe and thou by fire and husbands hand,
 Belou'd in staied sence was slaine in rage,
 Both by untimely death in natiue land
 Lost Empire, hope, and died in timelesse age,
 And he whose sword your bloud with furie spilt,
 Bereft himselfe of life through cursed guilt.*

*All ye that fixe your eies upon this tombe,
 Remember this, that beautie fadeth fast,
 That honours are entbralde to haples dombe,
 That life bath nothing sure, but soone doth wast;
 So liue you then, that when your yeares are fled,
 Your glories may suruiue when you are dead.*

In this sort were these murthered princes both buried, and honored with epitaphs, by which time the emperor of Mosco arriued in Cusco, who certified of that which had insued, with bitter teares lamented his daughter, and vpon the earnest submission of the Cuscans, spoiled not their confines, but possessing himselfe of the empire, he placed Arsinous gouernor of the same, whom vpon the earnest reconcilement and motion of the Princes, he tooke to fauour, being certified of his wrong and innocencie: which done, he returned to Mosco, there spending the remnant of his dayes in continual complaints of his Margarita.

NOTES

MENAPHON

3. 11. Euphues censure to Philautus] Euphues his censure to Philautus was written by Greene shortly before Menaphon. Philautus is the forlorn lover and Camilla the fair disdainful maid of Lyly's Euphues and his England, the sequel to Euphues. Neither of Greene's books have any connection with Euphues; the names are added for their advertisement value. Lodge, also to claim a connection with Euphues, calls his Rosalynde 'Euphues' golden legacy, found after his death in his cell at Silexdra.'

4. 1. To the Gentlemen Students of both Universities.] For a full discussion of this preface see The Works of Thomas Nashe, edited by Dr. R. B. McKerrow (especially vol. iv, pp. 444-459).

4. 10. placet] approval.

4. 25. art-masters] experts.

5. 1. kilcow conceipt] bombastic idea.

5. 10. take vp a commodity] raise a loan.

5. 26. extemporall vaine] Nashe much admired Greene's rapidity in writing. In Strange Newes (McKerrow, i, 287) he says, 'In a night and a day would he have yarkt up a Pamphlet as well as in seaven yeare.'

7. 12. Gothamists] Wise men of Gotham, i.e. fools.,

7. 16. punies] freshmen.

7. 18. furmentie] frumenty.

7. 33. what doo you lacke] the shopman's cry to the passers-by.

8. 2. crepundios] idle talkers.

8. 8. friplers] frippers, old clothes dealers.

8. 22. table] picture. 'The table of the world turned vpside down' is the sign of an inn.

8. 28. It is a cōmon practise now a daies] This famous passage is the chief evidence for the existence of a pre-Shakespearian Hamlet written by Thomas Kyd. The arguments in favour of the interpretation are set forth in Dr. F. S. Boas' edition of The Works of Thomas Kyd (p. xlvi); Dr. McKerrow, however, disagrees (iv, 449).

8. 33. necke-verse] the passage (usually the first verse of the 51st psalm) which a condemned man had to read to claim benefit of clergy.

11. 22. to vaunt the pride of contraction in euerie manuarie action] i.e. to take pride in manuals (manuaries) epitomising learned works rather than in the works themselves.

11. 23. Pater noster . . . in compasse of a pennie] This feat of penmanship was performed by Peter Bales, author of The Writing Schoolmaster.

15. 1. vndermeale] afternoon.

18. 6. Abcie] Absey or ABC book, a card containing the alphabet, the Lord's Prayer, etc., used for the beginner's first reading lessons. It is often called the horn book, being mounted on a wooden handle covered with horn to guard it against the schoolboy's hard handling.

18. 11. my Anatomie of Absurdities] Nashes' Anatomy of Absurdities was entered at Stationer's Hall on September 19, 1588.

18. 16. Paules] St. Paul's churchyard was chiefly inhabited by booksellers.

19. 11. a Lillie] i.e. John Lyly who set the fashion of 'labouring beautie' with his Euphues (1579).

19. 14. Greener obiectes] puns on Greene's name are tediously common in the works of his admirers, and of his enemies. R.B., for instance, in Greene's Funeralls, 1594, begins his ninth sonnet—

Greene, is the pleasing Obiect of an eie:
Greene, please the eies of all that looke vppon him:
Greene, is the ground of euerie Painters die:
Greene, gave the ground, to all that wrote vpon him.

23. 2. quiddities] subtleties.

23. 28. Laualtos] lavolta, a high-stepping dance.

24. 8. champion] champagne, open country.

25. 4. Chrisocolla] borax or green earth.

37. 5 posset] a hot drink made of milk curdled with wine.

39. 10. desiune] dejeuner.

39. 13. chamlet] camlet, an Eastern fabric.

40. 10. deined her eyes] noticed.

40. 13. cruell] worsted.

40. 19. cintfoyle] cincqfoil.

43. 11. polt-footed] clubfooted.

44. 32. bottles] wicker baskets.

45. 5. concepts] imaginings.

46. 24. beauties of:] Mr. Percy Simpson in his Shakespearian Punctuation (p. 71) notes the regular use of a colon to mark interrupted speech.

47. 5. Hobbie] an inferior breed of hawk.

47. 20. crost me] retorted.

48. 2. rammage] wild.

48. 27. cracke] break.

50. 4. amate] astonish.

50. 11. cassock] long coat, usually used for the soldier's great-coat.

50. 25. pad] food.

51. 19. girded] cut—as with a whip.
trump] contemptuous remark.

51. 22. impreso] device, motto.

51. 23. frowes] women.

52. 15. Saturnists] morose dullards.

52. 16. quattred] satiated.

54. 19. leekes] 'She says men die for love when larks die from leeks, id est, never' (Grosart).

57. 29. Epitazis] the development of the plot.

58. 25. Heliotropion] the heliotrope load] attraction, i.e. the sun.

61. 16. haute] high.

62. 7. sowterly] like a cobbler.

62. 32. pheare] fere, mate.

65. 12. nine holes] a country game in which the players had to roll the ball into holes, scoring on the principle of bagatelle.

66. 23. Hodge] peasant.

71. 22. Non est inuenitus] i.e. the letter could not be delivered.

71. 30. affie] trust.

74. 6. kistrell] a hawk of base breed and so unreliable.

75. 6. Tyre] prey.

76. 13. newe change driuen you to a night cap] The Elizabethan invalid used to tie his head up in a kercher. So in Julius Cæsar (II, i, 315) Brutus says to Ligarius,

‘O, what a time have you chose out, brave Caius,
To wear a kerchief. Would you were not sick.’

77. 26. kercher] cloth.

80. 9. pannicles] skull.

80. 11. fauchon] falchion.

83. 28. hansell] the first money taken at market; so, first use.

85. 15. platted] plotted.

90. 27. woones] dwells.

92. 17. whist] silenced.

92. 19. moderne] commonplace.

93. 15. stowre] encounter.

95. 21. rustie bills] The bill had gone out of use as a weapon, though it was still carried by the watch.

98. 3. difference] the addition or alteration made in a coat of arms to denote the younger branch of a family.

A MARGARITE OF AMERICA.

113. 4. M. Candish] Thomas Cavendish began his unfortunate voyage to the Straits of Magellan with three tall ships and two barks on August 26, 1591. The expedition was a failure from the first; Cavendish's own crew mutinied, and on May 20, 1592, the fleet was scattered. Cavendish died at sea, leaving a letter wherein he bitterly denounced John Davies for having deserted him. The miserable story can be read in Hakluyt.

115. 18. cures] cuirasses.

115. 23. shot as gards to the pikes] in military diagrams of the period, the pikes are shown as marching into action in close formation with the more mobile harquebusiers surrounding them in open order.

116. 23. the whole confines and reuenewes whereof is not sufficient to acquit for one moneth of your charges] compare Hamlet's outburst (IV, iv, 58).

117. 14. If you will be held vertuous and monarchies] The text should probably read ‘if you will be held vertuous monarchies,’ monarchies] monarchs.

120. 21. An infant first from nources teat he sucketh] Compare Jaques ‘At first the infant,
Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms’ . . .
As You Like It, II, vii, 143.)

127. 4. dolie] doleful.

129. 1. burgend] budded, fresh grown.

129. 23. emet] ant.

130. 2. Thou art leauing thy country for an other court] Compare the whole passage with Polonius' advice to Laertes, Hamlet, I, iii, 57.

131. 24. opinion] good repute.

138. 25. I must ende with &c.] I must leave what follows to your imagination.

146. 30. rescouse] rescue.

151. 30. hemd are each supposes] if the reading is correct the phrase should probably be paraphrased, 'coughed away is every kindly thought.' For this use of 'hem,' compare As You Like It, I, iii, 18:
 'These burs are in my heart.' 'Hem them away.'

154. 1. vnicorns horne.] A piece of 'genuine' unicorn's horn was one of the treasures of Windsor Castle shown to the Duke of Wirtemberg on his visit there on August 20, 1592 (Rye, England as seen by strangers, p. 16).

154. 18. sendall] a fine cypruss silk.

154. 31. after good] subsequent happiness.

160. 25. that the poore deceased ghostes may be appeased] The ghost of a murdered man could only be appeased by the violent death of the murderer. In the Hystorie of Hamblet (translated from the Belleforest's version of the Hamlet story), Hamblet, having slain his uncle, says: 'This just and violent death is a just reward for such as thou art: now go thy wayes, and when thou commest in hell, see thou forget not to tell thy brother (whom thou trayterously slewst) that it was his sonne sent thee thither with the message, to the ende that beeing comforted thereby, his soule may rest among the blessed spirits, and quit mee of the obligation that bound me to pursue his vengeance upon mine owne blood. . . .' (Golllanz, The Sources of Hamlet, p. 257.)

163. 10. pease] pea.

164. 15. The original punctuation has been left, but the sense would be improved by reading a full stop at 'drownd', and continuing

*Showers cherish
Thy barren bosome in the field:
I perish
Since nothing may me comfort yeelde.*

166. 29. his mistresse fauour, which was a sleeve of salamanders skinne] The sleeve was detachable and often worn by a knight as a token of his lady's love. In Troilus and Cressida Troilus gave Cressida a sleeve as a parting gift, which afterwards she gave to Diomede.

173. 3. limning] painting; but here, 'outlining'.

173. 17. incipe] the command given to a disputant in an academic exercise to begin his argument.

178. 21. wrings] turnings.

189. 7. Aperse] A per se, A 1, the one and only.

189. 10. carkanets] necklaces.

191. 18. boade] abide.

198. 24. yongman] 'young man' and 'boy' (like the modern 'pup') were both used as terms of insult meaning insolent and inexperienced.

200. 25. nouelties] revolution. 'Innovation' is often used with the same meaning.

204. 15. pale] literally fence; here used for the mouth as in the Homeric phrase ἐρκος ὀδόντων, the pale of the teeth.

210. 11. generositie] nobility.

210. 11. but see the generositie and vertue of the beast] The lion being a king-ly beast recognised the true princess by instinct. By the same instinct Falstaff sensed Prince Hal in the dark on Gadshill.

213. 29. ernefull] yearning, forboding.

214. 1. whomely acates] homely fare.

219. 3. prease] press, crowd.

TEXTUAL NOTES

MENAPHON

THE original texts of these romances have been reproduced in this edition without alteration, except that the roman type has been used for the black letter, the tall 'f' printed 's', and the '&' as 'and'.

The text of Menaphon has been printed from a copy of the first edition in the British Museum; in this copy the last leaf of Nashe's preface is missing, and has been supplied from the Bodleian copy of the second edition.

A few misprints have been corrected, viz. :—

- 8. 8. after for the original reading afetr
- 16. 6. Celiano, for Celiano.
- 16. 24. tutchstone for tutcsthone
- 21. 6. resolution, for resolution.
- 24. 24. Anacreon for Auarreon
- 26. 20. continue for continue
- 39. 16. chamber for chawber
- 52. 20. shepheards for shepheads
- 59. 27. vaunts for vauuts
- 66. 27. Pleusidippus for Pseusidippus
- 96. 31. Democles for Damocles
- 103. 2. did, for did.
- 104. 17. was. for was

A MARGARITE OF AMERICA

The text of A Margarite of America is taken from a copy of the first edition in the British Museum. It is very faulty, and the punctuation is exceedingly haphazard; this, says Lodge, was because the printer was not acquainted with his hand and the book printed in his absence.

The following corrections have been made:—

116. 6. these for their	127. 12. long , for long .
120. 8. with for which	129. 6. as for (as )

129. 13. hir for his
 134. 20. vngracious for vegracious
 135. 2. Minecius for Minecins
 143. 8. help for belp
 146. 3. you for yon
 146. 20. flint) for flint;
 148. 16. toombe for toobme
 150. 1. coruption for cornption
 151. 11. yet for ye
 153. 25. court, for court(
 157. 20. Arsadachus) for Arsadachus
 163. 2. caue for care
 163. 10. pease, for pease.

163. 16. neglect, for neglect.
 164. 20. daunt, for daunt.
 172. 25. their for theie
 175. 20. (I for I
 180. 31. dachus for dachns
 181. 18. in for im
 191. 25. Cosco. for Cosco
 194. 1. plentifull, for plentifullmy
 194. 21. weaknesse, for weaknesse
 206. 6. confesse. for confesse
 211. 1. thee, for thee
 211. 13. Margarita, for Margarita.
 214. 27. Arsadachus for Arsadachns

